Thatcher Rejects Dismantling Of Europe's Borders After '92

By Reginald Dale

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain formally rejected on Tuesday the concept of a frontier-free Europe after 1992, insisting that some border controls would have to remain even after the European Community established its planned single market.

In a major speech at the College of Europe in Bruges, Belgium, Mrs. Thatcher said that Britain's destiny was in Europe and called for practical steps to dismantle the community's internal economic and finan-

EC Court Upholds Danish Law That Limits Trade

By Barry James

In a landmark case, the European Court of Justice upheld a Danish law Tuesday that requires all beer and soft drinks to be sold in reusable containers against a deposit, even though this was held to be a barrier to free trade in the 12nation European Community. The decision by the Luxem-

Stock Sales Proposed For Industries in China

By Daniel Southerland Washington Part Service
BEIJING — The head of the Chinese Communist party, Zhao Ziyang proposed the sale of stock in state-owned enterprises in a ma-jor new effort to streamline inefficient industries, an official report said Tuesday.

The proposal by Mr. Zhao to make share offerings on a large scale would mean fundamental changes in the system of ownership that exists in most Chinese enterprises. The proposal was reported in a front page article in People's Daily, the official newspaper. Mr. Zhao revealed the plan in a meeting Monday with Milton Friedman, the American econo-

"This will be an extremely big reform of our state enterprises, Mr. Zhao was quoted as saying. The Economic Daily, another official newspaper, published a detailed account on Tuesday of why a shareholding system is needed in China to absorb consumer savings and increase production. Mr. Zhao listed the proposed stock sales as one of three main projects he supports to modernize the Chinese economy. The other two, he said, are a reform of the irrational pricing system and a and discussed at an upcoming fight against high inflation that has meeting of the Communist Party pushed up retail prices, causing panic and anger among consumers. In an apparent effort to placate such critics, Mr. Zhao indicated the enterprises would remain at least technically owned by the state. But there is agreement among Chinese officials that something must be done to revive poorly managed industries. Official statistics released in August said about 17 percent of the 6,000 most significant state-owned factories are unprofitable.

The State Statistics Bureau said the losses at those enterprises totaled about $1 billion in the first seven months of 1988, an increase of 27 percent over the same period

Economic Daily reported recently that government subsidies to state enterprises would reach 40 billion yean ($10.8 billion) this year, which is almost half of total earnings of Chinese industries.

Tug-of-War for the Reagan Supporters

By E.J. Dionne Jr.

New York Times Service LOS ANGELES — The single most important change since the summer in the state of the 1988 presidential contest is George Bush's success in wooing and bringing home

Ronald Reagan's supporters.

Because Vice President Bush is now getting their backing and expecting their votes, Mi-chael S. Dukakis's single most important task, in turn, is to halt this process by getting Reagan supporters, who include many Democrats and independents, to think of Mr. Bush separately from President Reagan.

The result is that despite two years of talk by Democrats about "the end of the Reagan win votes from his supporters.

era," the president remains a central force in the 1988 campaign. Because a majority — 55 percent — of the electorate now approves of him, both candidates must find arguments to Mr. Reagan is important, above all, because he has not only remained popular, but also has become more so as the year progressed. With Reagan popularity rising, said Adam Goodman, a Republican consultant in the shape of his own campaign so that he appeared to be the best guarantee of a continnation of the "Reagan crusade — for economic growth and strength abroad."

That, it seems, is how the voters see things. One of the most striking findings of the latest New York Times-CBS News Poll is that almost all of Mr. Bush's gains since August have come from Mr. Reagan's supporters. In two separate Times CBS News Polls, in August and a week ago, the Republican presidential candidate went from being 16 points behind Mr. Dukakis to being eight points ahead. Other polls show the race between the two men closer, but the broad movement toward Mr. Bush since the summer has been recorded in all the polls. In the August poll, the vice president was getting support from only 56 percent of those who approved of the way Mr. Reagan was handling his job. In the latest poll, Mr. Bush gets 75 percent of these voters.

In the same period, Mr. Dukakis's share of the pro-Reagan vote fell from 25 percent last month to 14 percent this month.

Among those who disapproved of Mr. Reagan, the contest changed much less, with most anti-Reagan voters in both polls going

For many Democratic strategists, including some inside the Dukakis campaign, these numbers suggest that Mr. Dukakis, in the words of Mark Mellman, a Washington-based Democratic poll taker, "must sever the connection between George Bush and the things people like about the Reagan adminis-tration." Mr. Reagan's active campaigning on behalf of his vice president will make that goal harder to achieve.

But Democrats are developing a strategy designed to force Mr. Bush to pay at least some cost for his ties to Mr. Reagan. Part of the strategy is based on the fact that while Mr. Reagan is generally popular, some of his administration's policies and actions are decidedly unpopular - notably, the Iran-See REAGAN, Page 7

Army Dominates; At Least 60 Die As Clashes Go On

BANGKOK — Burma's new military rulers, moving to consoli-date their grip on power after the coup last weekend, named a ninemember, military-dominated cabinet on Tuesday. Troops continued to fight run-ning street battles with pockets of anti-government protesters opposed to the new regime, according to news agency reports, Western diplomats and broadcasts on the official radio station.

Despite sporadic violence, the new government appears to have succeeded in stopping the massive pro-democracy demonstrations of the last six weeks that had brought hundreds of thousands of people into the streets.

The opposition leader Daw Aung San Suu Kyi told a Washington Post reporter in Rangoon, "There is hope for a settlement, but quite frankly things should be settled across the negotiating table."

"The more people they slaughter," she told the correspondent, Philip G. Smucker, "the less likely it is that we can reach an agree ment.

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and two other leading opposition leaders called for talks with General Saw Maung, the coup leader and armed forces chief of staff, in an effort to end the violence that on Monday claimed an estimated 400 or more

Government radio reported an appeal by senior Buddhist monks that the new leaders and the opposition leaders "show a sense of patriotism and meet face-to-face for talks."

A student leader, U Min Ko Naing, who heads the All-Burma Student Union, rejected the proposed dialogue and called instead for further violent action.

The cabinet includes eight senior military leaders and one civilian, Dr. Pe Thein, the health minister. U Saw Manng will be minister of defense and foreign minister. By the official count on state-run Radio Rangoon late Tuesday, troops shot and killed more than 60 protesters, who were identified in the broadcast as looters and "destructive elements," in a dozen sep-arate incidents, mostly in Rangoon. Student protesters still appeared to be controlling some streets and neighborhoods in Rangoon, Mr. Smucker reported. In a dispatch filed from Rangoon to Bangkok, Mr. Smucker said that students were guarding the homes of key opposition leaders, and that for-

Sudan Plans New Code of Islamic Law

By Blaine Harden

ashington Post Service NAIROBI - The Sudanese cabinet, in an act likely to prolong and probably intensify one of Africa's most destructive civil wars, has ap-proved a stringent new code of Is-lamic law denounced as unacceptable by Christian politicians in the divided country.

Among the punishments spelled out in the criminal code are death by stoning for "the offense of adultery," 100 lashes with a whip and five years in prison for "the offense of homosexuality" and death for "the offense of apostasy," which is defined as "renunciation of the creed of Islam." The key issue behind the civil war that has cut Sudan in half in the past five years, while spawning famine in the south, has been fear on the part of southern Christians that the Moslem-dominated north would insist that the country be governed by Islamic law. Colonel John Garang, leader of the rebel Sudanese People's Liberation Army, which controls most of southern Sudan, has said that imposing Islamic law or sharia as part of the national criminal code is unacceptable. He also has said that his guerrilla movement, which is armed by Ethiopia, is prepared to fight for decades against any Sudanese government that rejects a secular code of justice.

The strictest punishments spelled out in the new law, such as crucifizion for armed robbers and amputation for petty thieves, would not apply in the Christian south, according to a note attached to the 1988 code.

But Taha Ibrahim, a Sudanese lawyer and respected scholar on sharia, said the punishments would apply to the estimated one million "internally displaced" southerners

THE IRAQI EMBASSY

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT BY THE AMBASSADOR ABOUT HIS RECENT MEETING AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE

The Ambassador of the Republic of Iraq wishes to give a clear account of his recent meeting at the Foreign Office and also to put in perspective the Iraqi position regarding the current events in the north of Iraq.

The Ambassador was called to the Foreign Office on 6th September. He was informed of the British Government's concern about reports of the alleged use of chemical weapons and of military action in northern Iraq which had led to large number of refugees crossing the border into Turkey.

The Ambassador gave a categorical denial that chemical weapons were being or had been used in the current military operations in Kurdistan. The reports arose from a malicious concerned campaign against Iraq. The Ambassador told the Foreign Office that Iraq is taking action only against traitors who collaborated with the enemy against their own country and committed crimes against their own people.

The Ambassador expressed his dismay that the British Foreign Office should publicly involve itself with what was an internal matter for the Government of Iraq.

The Kurds live in Turkey, Iran, Syria, the Soviet Union and Iraq. Nowhere else are the Kurdish people and their culture given as much recognition and support as is the case in Iraq.

The autonomous region of Iraqi Kurdistan comprises the three provinces in northern Iraq in which Kurds make up the majority of the population (Dohuk, Arbil and Sulaymaniya) has its own legislative and executive organs. Kurdish culture and traditions are accorded their fullest place and given special regard. Instruction in schools is in Kurdish, in autonomous region. There is a university in Arbil with a department devoted to Kurdish studies and to the furtherance of the Kurdish language and culture. There is a Kurdish Cultural Academy to preserve, develop and promote Kurdish culture. There are TV and radio stations broadcasting in Kurdish and newspapers and magazines in Kurdish.

Nowhere else do the Kurds, as a distinctive ethnic group of people, have such extensive opportunities for self-expression. Nowhere else is there more encouragment and support of Kurdish culture, both by local bodies and by the official policy of the national state.

Among the large Kurdish population in Iraq there is a very small number of Kurds who have been in rebellion against the state of Iraq and its Government and people, and who have collaborated with its enemy and assisted Iranian forces in the invasion of Iraq. These traitors are not in the least representative of the Kurdish people of Iraq. Their armed rebellion against the Government of Iraq is also directed against the peace and productive life of their fellow Kurds.

The Iraqi Government has offered an amnesty to these Kurds if they wish to live in peace in their homeland, as it has done on previous occasions.

One of the basic duties of any Government is to ensure security and stability within the state. No Government can tolerate the continuation of an armed rebellion within the territory of the state. After the announcement of cease-fire, the leaders of the Kurdish armed rebellion in Iraq fled to Turkey with their families along with the civilian population they managed to drive before them. This was done an apparent effort to create a noisy campaign and to cover up their political bankruptcy and treason.

U.K. to Curb Funding for Terrorism

LONDON — The British government said Tuesday it would introduce new legislation to freezeand ultimately to confiscate, funds it believed were being used to fi-nance terrorist activities in Northern Ireland.

In a speech to police superintendents, Home Secretary Douglas Hurd said that the government planned to "strike directly at the financial roots of terrorism" by increasing its powers under the existing Prevention of Terrorism Act.

The proposed law, he said, was aimed at choking off a wide array of activities, including racketeering and the laundering of money. and the laundering of money through legitimate businesses, practices used by both the Irish Republican Army and Protestant paramilitary groups.

During the student revolts of the 1960s, many U.S. colleges relaxed — or abandoned — the parietal rules that govern visiting privileges between students of the opposite sex. Few institutions have tightened such rules since, but Boston University is one of them. Haiti Cabinet Sworn In, With Vow of Democracy

By Julia Preston Washington Post Service

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti -Lieutenant General Prosper Avril in the first actions of his new military government, swore in a predominantly civilian cabinet and said a return to democracy was the "final objective" of his rule.

In a six-minute speech Monday at the cabinet's investiture ceremony, General Avril pledged to restore public order and maintain a dialogue with the population. He said Haiti had been "ravaged, mu-tilated and defiled" by the regime of Lieutenant General Henri Namphy, whom he ousted. The new cabinet includes 10 little-known professionals and only one military officer, Defense Minister Carl Dorsainvil. There was no indication that the position of Colonel Jean-Claude Paul would change. Colonel Paul, the com-mander of a key garrison, was in-dicted in March in Miami on cocaine-trafficking charges.

General Avril's announcement added to a general sense of relief in Haiti over the downfall of General Namphy, who had himself seized power June 19 from Leslie Manigat, a civilian president who lasted only four months.

Under General Namphy's tenure, assailants had carried out a string of bloody attacks on opposi-educated and courteous." "I'm not a prophet, but I think this is definitely an improvement." Mr. Gourgue said. He speculated that if General Avril had come to power instead of General Namphy when Jean-Claude Duvalier fled to France on Feb. 7, 1986, "we would not have lost these 31 months to violence and disorder." Mr. Gourgue was one of several front-running presidential candi-dates in an election last Nov. 29 that was halted violently by gangs, with General Namphy's tacit ap-

Candidates Picking Debate Panelists
WASHINGTON (AP) -- Vice President George Bush and Governor

Michael S. Dukakis will step forward to take questions in their first presidential debate Sunday, but it remains unclear who will be asking those questions.

Mr. Dukakis, the Democratic candidate, proposed Monday that the news anchormen of the four commercial television networks be moderated and the second state of the four commercial television networks be moderated by Rush tor-and panelists, sources familiar with the negotiations said. Mr. Bush had his own list of four possible moderators and 10 questioners. The issue was still being debated by Bush and Dukakis aides as the Sunday date for the face-off at Wake Forest University in North Carolina drew closer.

The first debate is sponsored by the parties' commission on debates. The second presidential debate, due Oct. 13 or Oct. 15 in Los Angeles, is

Mr. Zeller said the 1.6 million-member union had extended until Sept. 30 the deadline for the rank and file to return poll ballots on presidential preferences that were mailed to them three weeks ago.

The Teamsters were among three of the AFL-CIO's 91 affiliated unions that abstained last month from the labor federation's overwhelming endorsement of the Democratic nominee, Michael S. Dukakis. The Teamsters president, William McCarthy of Boston, is known to dislike Mr. Dukakis, who is governor of Massachusetts.

Too Tough on Iraq? No

Senate vote on sanctions against Iraq is one of those well-intentioned but misguided gestures to which representative government, given to instant enthusiasms, is regrettably prone. No one contests the proposition that poison gas, which Iraq has been using against its Kurds, is terrible and that a strong stand against it is necessary to blunt the example of cost-free use. But, it is pointed out, Iraq is an important country in a region of broad American interests; the best way to proceed is in a context that will not raise Iraq's nationalist hackles and that will permit a balanced continuing relationship with that regional power.
But surely this is to turn things on their head. The United States has reported "incontrovertible evidence" of "massive use" of gas against Kurdish guerrillas and civilians — use with a frequency, in a mode and on a scale suggesting something close to genocidal purpose. That constitutes an egregious violation of even the rubbery rules of war that now prevail. In a world in which many things are murky, this one is clear. If gas is not to be considered beyond the limits, then there are no limits.

Repeatedly in the past, the United States and other countries, acting on their own and through the United Nations, pleaded with Iraq and condemned its conduct of gas war-fare. Mindful of the strategic exigencies of the Iran-Iraq war, however, the protesters kept up their links with the Baghdad regime. Perhaps that was a mistake. Perhaps Iraq took their hesitation to move from words to deeds as a big wink. In any event, it is only now, in conditions of a cease-fire that af-fords many comforts to Iraq, and when it is using gas not against Iranian troops but against its own citizens, that the Senate has acted. It acted, moreover, not to spoil a relationship - one that was of tremendous value to Iraq in turning the tide of war but to establish a more solid basis on which a relationship can continue now. Iraq is not being asked to do anything that it should find onerous: only to stop the practice of a horrible, outlawed manner of war in a campaign against the Kurds in which it will still be able to press its overwhelming advantage. Some American offi-cials have let it be known they fear that this condition is unacceptable to Iraq. They are encouraging those in Baghdad who say: See, the Americans don't really care.

— THE WASHINGTON POST.

Next Steps for Turkey

Turkey took on the unaccustomed role of championing human rights when it opened its borders to 60,000 desperate Kurds fleeing Iraq's army and poison gas. This courageous action by Prime Minister Turgut Ozal is sure to damage relations with Baghdad and spotlight Ankara's repression of Turkey's own large Kurdish minority. But the rest of the world has taken positive notice. If Turkey now means to be more attentive to other human rights issues, its chances for admission into the European Community will surely be improved.

To be sure, Turkey has come a long way from its late 1970s lawlessness, its early 1980s military regime and the repression that until only recently kept Plato's "Republic" out of university classrooms. Fragile democracy is growing steadier. Yet charges of brutality by the police and torture in the prisons still dog Turkish authorities. And Turkish Kurds are, as ever, denied the most fundamental forms of self-expression, their language and culture outlawed.

This last fact makes all the more notable the granting of safe haven to the Iraqi Kurds

(after initial reports that Turkey had forcibly transferred some refugees to Iran). Turkey may have had little choice, confronted with desperate people arriving by the tens of thousands. Still, the response went beyond bare necessity, perhaps reflecting sensitivity to Western human rights concerns.

Western countries have taken notice. The Turks have been commended in the U.S. Senate and praised by the Western diplomatic community in Ankara. Turkey, finding that it likes the approval, could stimulate in area to get into the Community is already credited with spurring Turkish moves toward peace with Greece. Two other steps could also help. First, and most obviously, it could look toward lifting its repressive hold on its own Kurds. Second, it might at last acknowledge the massacre 70 years ago of Armenians in Turkey, opening the way for an honest examination of Turkey's relations with its minorities. A Turkey that can behave well toward Iraqi Kırrds - and enjoy consequent international acclaim — might find that easier than it sounds.

Haiti: Force Wins Again

Another president has now been loaded at gunpoint onto a plane headed out of Haiti. and another general has replaced him. There is little reason to think that the new leadership, under Lieutenant General Prosper Avril. represents any great improvement over its predecessors. Haiti has now had four regimes in the past year, the last three ruling in open violation of the new constitution.

The reasons for the coup are again obscare. The Tontons Macoutes, the armed irregulars who were the enforcers for the deposed Duvalier dictatorship, recently shot up a Roman Catholic church during Mass and murdered a dozen people. Then, in the ultimate gesture of contempt for the law, they went on television to warn others not to displease them. The coup may have been, in some part, a reaction to those events by military units hostile to the Macoutes. But that may not be the whole story.

It is wrong to think of Haitian politics in modern terms. Haiti has no effective government and has had none for years. It has reverted to a much older pattern. Small bands of armed men, some in uniform and some not, follow their respective captains, fighting each other for booty and respect. The captain survives as long as he can provide his followers with those rewards. Many are involved in smuggling some in drugs. Colonel Jean-Claude Paul, who has been accused by U.S. authorities of international drug running on a conspicuous scale, seems to have emerged from this latest change of command with his status undiminished

U.S. influence in Haiti is now, unfortunately, minimal. When the Haitian army used its guns last autumn to disrupt a legal presidential election, the United States cut aid to the barest minimum of humanitarian support. That has left nothing more to cut.

Haiti is a country of six million people, of isolated from the world and impoverished. It is one of the few countries in the world where food supplies have diminished in the past generation. The diet there is more meager than in India or most of Africa.

To make a real difference in these people's condition, a government — if there were one — would have to find the key to a rapid increase in foreign aid. That key is elections, and a return to the constitution. The armed bands resist it as a threat to their activities. If General Avril is not prepared to move in that direction, the current anarchy is likely to continue and the present poverty will deepen.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

Other Comment

Independent but Barbaric

The plight of Haiti seems almost to establish a case for old-fashioned colonialism. Since its early independence from France in 1804 [it] has made almost no progress under a succession of barbaric and picturesque rulers. The United States must think carefully before resuming the aid suspended when General Namphy seized power — a policy which so far has merely lowered the living standards of most Haitians without appreciably advancing democracy's cause.

- The Daily Telegraph (London).

The South Korean Example

The world will be looking at Seoul in the same light as at Tokyo when it hosted the 1964 Olympics: as a new power rising, a nation reborn. The moves last year toward popular participation were not destabilizing: They have, in fact, boosted South Korea's stability, enabling [it] to focus on development. South Korea's economic and political paths may serve increasingly as an inspiration to other Asian nations, such as Burma, struggling toward lasting change. The Korean example challenges the assumption of too many outside the developing world that ruthless autocratic rule is a necessary adjunct to rapid economic growth.

— The Australian Financial Review.

For the first time in a dozen years, the Games are virtually politics-free. This year the spotlight belongs, as it always should, to the athletes who have worked so hard to become the best their countries can offer. That was the ideal of the ancient Greek Olympiad, and precisely what Baron Pierre de Coubertin had in mind when the Games were resurrected almost a century ago. - The Bangkok Post.

Despite years of diplomatic effort, the divide between Seoul and Pyongyang finally doomed the hope that the Games would prove to be a unifying force on the Korean peninsula. This is indeed a pity. In the shadow of this failure has lurked the greatest fear for this year's Olympics: the possible intensification of confrontation between North and South. The chances of a military clash seem remote. It is a shame, though, that the splendid artistry of the parallel bars, the high diving board and the judo mat must be accompanied by one of the greatest concentrations of American naval power in the Sea of Japan since the Korean conflict. - The Japan Times (Tokyo).

These young people have spent eight to 10 hours every day for the last 10 years mastering goofy, unpopular sports. The least you can do is watch.

Taiwan Strait: Look Back and Learn the Lessons

T OKYO — Just over 30 years ago, in the summer of 1958, the world faced nuclear war over a clash in the Taiwan Strait between Beijing and the rival Nationalist govern-ment in Taipei. This summer thou-sands of Taiwanese citizens visited China freely for the first time. Taiwanese fishing boats claudestinely trade in and out of Chinese ports.

Peace has broken out in yet another corner of the globe, but this time the implications are far more important than Iran-Iraq or Angola.

In his recent memoirs, President Andrei Gromyko, the former Soviet foreign minister, has said that Beijing engineered the Taiwan Strait clash to induce a U.S. invasion of the Chinese mainland which Moscow was supposed to crush with nuclear weapons. Many Chinese would die, but in the process America would be humiliated.

The Gromyko account is somewhat fanciful, but the true story is just as alarming. The crisis began with Beijing's bombardment of Na-tionalist-held islands near the Chi-nese coast, in a bid to weaken the Nationalists and reinforce Beijing's claim to the true government of China. The United States then told Beijing through secret diplomatic channels that any threat to the islands, not to mention Taiwan itself, would be met with nuclear retaliation.

Beijing turned to Moscow for the nuclear support it believed it was entitled to under the then existing Chinese-Soviet alliance. The Soviets declined, reasonably enough, on the grounds that they had little interest in risking a nuclear war with the United States simply to weaken Taiwan. Beijing was forced into a humiliating back-down. The seeds of the sown, and Beijing began its long period of isolationist policies which were to climax in the immensely damaging Cultural Revolution.

At the time, few Western strategists realized that the Chinese-Soviet dispute had begun with this simple clash of national interest. Most saw it as an ideological battle between moderate Soviet Communists and extremist Chinese Communists. This in turn provided the ideological justification for Western intervention in Vietnam — to counter extremist Asian communism - and for the diplomatic embargo on Beijing. And so the Cold War became firmly embedded in Asia. But for the failure of the Vietnam intervention, and the boldness of the Nixon-Kissinger over-tures to Beijing in 1972, Asia today would still be stuck in the morass of East-West confrontation. The remarkable political and economic progress we have seen in the past decade, with even North Korea moving out of isolation, would have been aborted. The moral in all this? One, that homework better. And two, that we

By Gregory Clark should all learn to handle civil war for so long Taiper's claims to be the confrontations better. Beijing's hostility to Taiwan back in 1958 is understandable. The Chi-nese Communists had in 1949 won a long and bitter civil war against a U.S.-backed enemy. That enemy had then fled to Taiwan, where with continued U.S. backing it was still claiming to be the only true government of China and to have the right to use military force against Beijing. When Beijing belatedly set out to use military force against Taiwan, the United States felt free to threaten nuclear war. Little wonder that Beijing fumed with indignation for so long — 14 years, to be precise.

In retrospect, though, even Beijing would accept that it was just as well that its Taiwan Strait attack failed. Taiwan's subsequent economic suc-cess has stimulated economic reform in China. The growing trade deficit across the strait has an even more direct benefit. The goals that Beijing could not reach by force then have been largely reached by negotiation. Where the United States was wrong on Taiwan was in bolstering

But with its own legitimacy recognized, it would not have felt it had to force that fateful confrontation in the Taiwan Strait of 1958. Decades of hatred, suffering and the risk of nuclear war would have been avoided. And Taiwan would probably have been in exactly the same favorable position as it is today. In Vietnam, too, the formula would have worked wonders. When it was clear that Saigon lacked the will to save itself, the West should have intervened simply to create an en-clave in South Vietnam —an onshore Taiwan - where the anti-Communists could regroup, reorganize and think about their future.

The Latins Should Top The Agenda By Sol M. Lino VASHINGTON WIPP

WASHINGTON — For whoever wins the White House, some of the toughest foreign policy challenges will be close to home. U.S. relations in the Western Hemisphere are deeply troubled, as much as at any time in recent history. And the new administration will need fresh practical proposals to deal with some very difficult problems: the debt crisis; the burgeoning traffic in illegal drugs; the frictions over trade and migration; the persistence of the moil in Central America. U.S. politic today is not effectively addressing any of these issues. In all of them, conflict, not cooperation, has come to dominate U.S.-Latin relations. It is time for Washington to reorder its hemispheric priorities. For too long it has been obsessed with one small country, Nicaragua, leaving more portentous problems unattended. As its first priority, the new administration must confront the debt problem head-on. Latin America has already lost a decade of development. and its recovery remains blocked by a huge burden of unpayable debt.

The partial measures taken so far have kept most of these countries on a treadmill of painful austerity, economic stagnation and rising della Fragile democracies throughout the region are losing support and credibility because they cannot meet the basic demands of their citizens.

A new approach is urgently needed. The capacity of each Latin American country to manage its debt should be evaluated on a case by case basis. Every country prepared to pursue sound economic policies should have its payments fixed at a level that allows sustained growth, political sta-bility and social advance.

The United States has the technical competence to work all this out. It lacks the resolve. The longer it delays taking decisive action, the greater the ultimate cost — for the United States as well as for Latin America.

In Central America, a new U.S. administration must make a firm commitment to support the Arias peace plan, which provides a viable framework for resolving Central American wars and building a lasting peace. As called for by the plan, Washington should confine further support to the contras to humanitarian aid.

It should be ready to negotiate to rectly with Managua on regional security arrangements to ensure that Nicaragua will sharply reduce the size of its army, withdraw Soviet bloc military personnel, cut its weapons acquisitions and stop aiding foreign insurgents.
The United States, with other Western democracies, should devise and carry out a strategy of sustained diplomatic, political and economic pressure to promote democratic openings and protect human rights in Nicaragua and throughout Central America.

The next U.S. administration will a shared tragedy. Blaming other countries only aggravates the prob-lem. What is needed is sustained coperation between the United States and Latin America to ensure that the necessary resources are put to work. The United States also has a central role to play in helping to rebuild inter-American institutions.

Today the Organization of American States is all but irrelevant in hemispheric affairs, and the Inter-American Development Bank is mired in a damaging dispute between the United States and the Latin American members. The United States must provide the leadership to arrest the deterioration of these institutions. It is not now fulfilling its financial obligations to the OAS.

Then there is Panama, U.S. actions in Panama in the past months have come to epitomize for many Latin Americans much of what is wrong with U.S. policy in the region.

Removing General Manuel Auto-nio Noriega from power and resto democratic rule to Panama are essential goals, but Washington should stop trying to go it alone. It should respect the Latin Americans initiative and encourage their efforts to promote a negotiated solution be-tween General Noriega's forces and Panama's internal opposition. The fundamental challenge for a new U.S. administration will be to restore a sense of trust and partnerreadiness in Moscow to pull even the ship in relations. A Sculptor's Memorial Explains His Survival Drancy Monument to Holocaust Brings 'Total Serenity' to Creator

. By Steven Greenhouse New York Times Service

DRANCY, France - "When I survived. I lelt a great sense of guilt," said Shelomo Selinger, who spent four years in Nazi conceniration camps as a tecn-ager. "I felt the good people had died, and only the bad survived."

For years, Mr. Selinger, a short, powerful man who became a sculptor, shouldered this burden of guilt. "It was the insect that devoured me," he said.

It was only when Mr. Selinger temered a competition in 1974 to design a memorial to the 100,000 Jews deported to Hitler's death camps from the Drancy internment center outside Paris that he figured out why he had not died like the others.

The monument stands where the camp's front gates once stood, where French policemen and German SS men pushed and dragged Jews into the camp. Now, dozens of the deportees' descendants leave flowers there each year while hundreds of schoolchildren come to commemorate the time of hor

Early last year, Maurice Niles, the mayor of this industrial suburb, suggested to Mr. Selinger that they add as part of the monument an old French train car that transported Jews from Drancy to

But the mayor explained that while many visitors were moved by the 12-year-old monument, some people saw it and asked for documentation and explanations about what happened to Jews in Drancy and elsewhere during World War II.

The mayor's idea was to transform the train car into a small, poignant museum where school-

Persuaded by the mayor. Mr. Selinger has designed an expand-ed monument, with 30 yards of rusty railroad tracks leading from

The French national railroad found a retired car, dark and with splintering wood on the inside, that the Vichy government had ordered in 1942 because it needed apartment block, under construction when the war broke out, that became the Drancy concentration

Behind the monument is the is a willingness to forget among many French people. There were many French people who helped Jews during the war, but many were collaborators.

Mr. Selinger's own concentration camp experience was so terrible that, like many survivors, he blocked all memories of the horrors for years after the war.

His memories finally flooded back in 1953, producing a torrent of nightmares. He began doing Drancy," Mr. Selinger said, stand- sculpture about that time. "It was

Planned Germ Warfare Facility Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Army, bowing to public pressure. has scaled back its plans to build one of the world's most secure laboratories for scientists to test the deadliest agents for germ warfare, including virulent pathogens created by genetic engineering.

A new lab — to be constructed in 1991 at Dugway Proving Ground, 70 miles (110 kilometers) southwest of Salt Lake City - will instead contain less-stringent security and safety precautions, allowing researchers to study bacteria and viruses that pose only a modest risk of causing lethal disease when in-

Finally, a board of retired generals and admirals led by General Russell E. Dougherty of the air force has concluded: "A perception exists that our intermediate and senior colleges are 'gentlemen's courses.' While not entirely agreeing that such schooling is lightweight, the board said. This perception is not without basis."

Thus, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral William J. - Chemical warfare in the Gulf has added urgency to calls for action. but the ability of Iraq to get and use poison gas has dramatized enforcement difficulties, the sources said. . At the Geneva talks on climinatmg chemical weapons, negotiators have concluded that they have fallin behind the rapid changes in technology that, for example, engas against Iranian forces — and perhaps against Iraq's Kurdish minority - the political difficulties of getting international action emerged clearly, diplomats said.

The Reagan administration has had little success in its campaign to get allied governments to condemn retary of state, in cables containing what one U.S. diplomat called "some of the most strongly worded instructions" they had ever had.

For example, France has been reluctant to initiate inquiries under the 1925 Geneva Protocol on Gas Warfare - to which Iraq is a signatory — although this is its assigned

A group called the Australian committee, because it met in the Australian Embassy in Paris, hastened the adoption of export controls by allied governments on materials liable to used to make chemical weapons. The Soviet Union started applying similar curbs unilaterally at the same time. But the curbs proved difficult to apply to "dual-use" chemicals of the sort that have legitimate uses as well as military applications. Since two innocent chemicals can be combined to create a weapon, violations are extremely hard to detert, officials note.

The Soviet Union raised hopes for the talks last year when it agreed, unexpectedly, to accept short-notice inspections of its chemical-arms stockpiles. But Soviet officials, in recent international conferences, have signaled a more pessimistic assessment in Moscow.

West German officials have consistently urged allied governments to assign a higher priority to obtaining an agreement that would start eliminating the chemical weapons of the Warsaw Pact forces.

France, sensitive to West Germany's predicament, has started watering down its controversial plan for nations to retain small security stocks" of chemical weapons for 10 years while the Soviet Union destroyed its stockpile.

But a breakthrough will have to wait for a U.S. push by a new president, diplomats said. Michael . Dukakis has said that he would try to end the spread of chemical eapons. Seattle Murderer May Have Gone South

By Jay Mathews SAN DIEGO - Perhaps because they were so often ignored in life, it took a long time to notice the odd similarity of their deaths. The remains of young women from Seattle's red light districts began to be found in rural fields and woods near thoroughfares in Washington in 1982. The first five discovered had been strangled. Most of the next 35 bodies, including four found in Oregon, were too decomposed to determine the cause of death. Eight more missing Seattle-area women are also thought to have been victims of the Green River Killer, named for the area where the first bodies were found. By the time local authorities realized the breadth of the tragedy — perhaps the largest serial-killing episode in U.S. history — and esablished a task force to deal with of seemingly unrelated facts. And now, 1,000 miles (1,600 kilometers) area detectives for six years. to the south, there is evidence suggesting that the killer may be at work again.

In San Diego, a wave of 30 un-solved killings of young women — many with connections to the raunchy entertainment strip along El Cajon Boulevard, many dumped in rural settings near a main road — has prompted the formation of an-other task force, the first outside the Pacific Northwest to be hunting for the Green River Killer.

There are "striking similarities" between some of the San Diego and Green River cases, said Dick Lar-son, a spokesman for the Washington task force. Yet neither investi gation has yielded enough evidence to absolutely convince detectives that they are looking for the same murderer.

Last week San Diego officials announced the formation of the San Diego Multiple Homicide Task Force which will explore the Green River connection. Police in both cities have declined to be specific about suspects or about the clues that seem to link the killings.

The Washington investigation began shortly after bicyclists riding across the Peck Bridge in Kent, about 20 miles southeast of down town Seattle, saw the body of 16-year-old Wendy Coffield snag July 15, 1982. Four more bodies were soon found in the river.

Investigators said the skeleton was that of Debra Lorraine Estes, who was last seen Sept. 20, 1982. She was 15 at the time, and had an arrest record for prostitution.

The first similar San Diego killing was that of Donna Marie Gen-tile, 22, a prostitute. She had been a witness in a city civil-service commission case in which police were charged with receiving sexual favors in exchange for warning pros-titutes about planned arrests. Her nude body was found June 25. 1985, along Sunrise Highway just north of Interstate 8, about 40 miles east of downtown San Diego. She had been strangled and gravel had been jammed down her throat.

Some experts believe that at least 50 serial killers are at large in the United States at any one time. But Robert Keppel, chief criminal investigator for the Washington state attorney general's office said he considers that figure conservative, citing the number of missing-person reports filling police files and the unidentified skeletons found regularly nationwide.

AIDS in Prostitutes Not Widespread

By Bruce Lambert

Yew York Times Service NEW YORK - AIDS testing of female prostitutes and their customers indicates that infection among prostitutes is not as widespread as some experts had expect-

The two groups have been under close scrutiny as potential spreaders of the AIDS virus among het-erosexuais. Tests of 1,829 prostitutes in three studies in New York City and in a national study in eight other areas found that 12 percent of those tested had the antibodies to the virus, and that most of those women were intravenous drug users.

An equally important finding is the scant evidence of female prostitutes' passing the virus to their customers. Two studies that tested 627 such men in New York City found only three cases in which the virus was thought likely to have been caught from a prostitute.

"I don't know of any proven cases" of female prostitutes' infecting clients, said Dr. William W. Darrow, an AIDS epidemiology official at the Federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. Dr. Darrow oversees the federal survey. which will soon begin recruiting male customers of prostitutes for Researchers say they believe the sharing of contaminated needles to inject drugs, and not sexual coneacts with multiple partners, is the main source of AIDS among prostitutes. In the federal study, researchers found a high correlation between drug use and AIDS: 80 percent of the infected prostitutes said they used drugs or had visible needie tracks.

"The major risk factors for pros-titutes are being intravenous drug users, or sex partners of drug ussaid Dr. Rand Stoneburner. the New York City Health Depart-ment's director of AIDS research.

The AIDS infection rates for prostitutes are lower than for other and as a point for prevention efgroups regarded as being at high risk. Some surveys of homosexual men and intravenous drug addicts have found 50 percent or more to be infected.

Researchers are uncertain why more prostitutes do not seem to be infected, a question that reflects the larger mystery of why sexual transmission of AIDS has been so much lower among heterosexuals than homosexuals in this country.

The researchers note that the findings seem to reflect the national rate of heterosexual transmission, which is lower than in Africa and the Caribbean

In Kenya, for example, a recent study of 1,000 prostitutes in Nairofected with the AIDS virus. Most heterosexual AIDS cases in this country occur among women who from Africa and the Caribbean.

Japan Bracing for End Of the Era of Hirohito

Emperor, 87, Takes Turn for Worse, And a Vigil Begins at Imperial Palace

By Margaret Shapiro

Washington Past Service TOKYO - Japan began to brace Tuesday for the ending of an era after reports that Emperor Hirobito, 87, had taken a severe turn for the worse.

According to Imperial Palace of ficials, Hirohito began vomiting blood and showing other signs of internal bleeding late Monday night and again Tuesday morning

He was quickly given transfu-sions to stem the blood loss but. apparently sensing the worst, impeal family members and officials ashed to the palace in the middle of the night as Japanese television networks began a live, nonstop vigil at the palace gates.

Hirohito has been visibly frail since last year, when he was operated on for what palace doctors said was pancreatitis but what was widely conjectured at the time to be pancreatic or liver cancer.

In the last few months, Hirohito had grown quite thin and suffered several bouts of fever that palace doctors said were a result of a cold or, just last week, possibly an infection of the digestive tract. Recently, he also began to show signs of jaun-dice, which is frequently a symptom of liver failure.

One of Japan's top cancer spe-tialists said Tuesday that Hirohi-to's symptoms — bleeding and jamedice — indicated that his disease had reached an "extremely critical" stage and that it was un-likely he could last much longer.

taken in Brussels as intended as a further riposte to Jacques Delors, president of the community's Executive Commission, who has said that 80 percent of national economic policy could have "a European dimension" within the next 10 years and called for discussion of a potential European government.

Urging a practical, step-by-step approach to European cooperation. Mrs. Thatcher said Europeans could not afford to waste their energies on "internal disputes or arcane institutional debates. They are no substitute for effective action."

And she said it was just as important for European governments to collaborate on defense and national security issues that lie outside the scope of the EC as on the economic and trade policies covered by the community.

In striving to maintain the United States' commitment to Europe's defense, European governments must pay attention to the growing American demands for "burdensharing" in the Atlantic alliance, "particularly as Europe grows wealthier," Mrs. Thatcher said. "The time has come when we must give substance to our declarations about a strong defense and better value for money," she said.

"Each member of the alliance must shoulder a fair share of the bur-

Sam Woodyard, Jazz Drummer, Is Dead In Paris

PARIS - Sam Woodyard, 63, an American jazz musician who was Duke Ellington's inseparable, improvising drummer, died in Paris Tuesday, friends said.

Show Dates For Fashion

LONDON — The heads of the British, French and Italian fashion industries have resolved the conflict of dates for the shows

The Milan ready-to-wear shows for autumn and winter will open on March 5 and will run for five days. The London shows and exhibition will follow on March 10-14. The Paris designer shows will be held from March 15 to 22.

The dates were decided at a meeting on Monday, hosted by the British Fashion Council, under its chairman Sir Edward Rayne. The French delegation was headed by Jacques Mouclier, president-elect of the Fédération Française de la Conture and of the ready-to-wear high fashion designers. Loris Abate, president of the Camera Nazionale Dell'Alta Moda Italiana, led the Italian team, which included Beppe Modenese of Mi-

Dates for October 1989 are still not finalized, although Denise Dubois, press attaché for the French hante couture industry, confirmed that the Paris shows will begin on Oct. 18. The Italians and British have to decide whether to schedule around that date or whether to have earlier shows as both industries would prefer. Meetings will now be held regularly with the next one to take place in June 1989 in Paris. - SUZY MENKES

Though some observers had hoped that the board of trustees might choose a career ad-ministrator who would share reponsibility with an artistic director, rather in the style of the Metropolitan Opera's team of Bruce Crawford and James Levine, that was not in the cards. Perhaps no qualified opera administrator was available at this time for transfer to New York, or perhaps Keene had the inside track all the while. We may never

However, with hindsight it is possible to see the 41-year-old conductor's appointment as one that follows a tradition of City Opera. which has throughout its history been under the control of artists, not professional manag-

Since its first season in 1944, the company has had five general directors, four of them conductors: Laszlo Halasz, Joseph Rosen-stock, Erich Leinsdorf and Julius Rudel. The fifth, Sills, was one of the great sopranos of her time before retiring to take over direction of the troupe in 1979.

But control by artists is a City Opera tradition, not a universal rule. Opera companies following year. He left the company last year, have been run successfully both by perform-however, explaining that he wished to be free

Still Keene's career certainly testifies to his abundant energies and great organizational skills. At Artpark, he managed to put together Wagner's "Ring" on a shoesting budget, partly with borrowed sets.

He has been exceptionally alert to new music. It was Keene who introduced Sills to the most of La Paint and the most of La Pa

Unfortunately, as the City Opera's sixth general director, he will drag along some weighty baggage. He has had a reputation for arrogance and lack of tact in dealing with orchestras that more administrative responsi-

His performances, moreover, often have been incomprehensibly graceless, hard-driven and, when not actually crude, seemingly more concerned with getting the job done than with subtleties.

So, it would be one more surprise if the City Opera's board were under the impression that Keene's talents are indispensable in the orchestra pit. Maureen Lipman impersonates Joyce Grenfell in London show using the late performer's material.

'Re: Joyce!': Joyfully Reviving Grenfell

down Pont Street, and the Home Counties will rise up in celebration from Guildford yea even unto Leatherhead and Go-daiming: Joyce Grenfell is back in the West End. Not in person, admittedly, since she died in 1979, but in a reasonable facsimale thereof cobbled together at the Fortage of the form "useful and acceptable of the state of the form "useful and acceptable of the state of the form "useful and acceptable of the state of the form "useful and acceptable of the state of the s atre as "Re: Joyce!"

THE BRITISH STAGE

kick role first perfected for Joyce on innumerable tours by the great and good Bill Blezard, this is effectively an evening of Granfell-worship largely made up of her old songs and monologues, interwoven with extremely brisk biographical linking material by James Roose-Evans, who has also recently published a best-selling edition of her wartime letters.

Any attack on Joyce Grenfell, however faint and however qualified, is regarded by the British (as I once discovered to my cost) as second only in the treachery charts to an attack on the Queen Mother or polo ponies.
But certain facts about Grenfell do have to be faced in the light of this celebration, and be faced in the light of this celebration, and one of them is that most of her own material was sketchy. Water-thin speeches about English social misfits or anomalies, and wan little romantic numbers by her faithful composer Richard Addinsell, were turned by Joyce into a kind of greasepaint gold largely because she always retained a kind of amateur status thereby making an audience feel from "useful and acceptable gifts" through thereof cobbled together at the Fortune The-The wonder now is how Grenfell got away with them even on Broadway so successfully

The answer is that she was somehow all of our aunts, and we never dared to complain when she was getting a bit repetitive and a bit boring toward the end. When "Re: Joyce!" concentrates on the wartime Grenfell, and she goes in uniform to slay the enemy with a social monologue ("Sugar is unobtainable anywhere in Maidenhead" was her uniquely characteristic comment on the outbreak of World War II), we realize her strength was in

In more peaceful times, one might have hoped she could have found herself one or two better writers, but there is a huge ongo-ing love for her among those who have al-ways preferred the ladies and gentlemen to the players, and I suspect that "Re: Joyce!" will be at the Fortune and in Miss Lipman's suitcase for several years to come. She has even managed to perfect that maddeningly arched eyebrow of surprise with which Gren-fell used to acknowledge the applause of the faithful, and Alan Strachan's agile produc-tion has done both ladies proud. two better writers, but there is a huge ongotion has done both ladies proud.

Traitors" that fared badly at Hampstead, and to judge from the general critical boycott of his new "Dreams in an Empty City" at the Hammersmith Lyric, it looks as though Sew-ell is in for another London flop.

That is more than a little sad, because what we have here, in all of 52 scenes, is an what we have here, in an or 32 scenes, is an urban nightmare of the Sydney subway that looks as though Caryl Churchill's "Serious Money" has been relocated in Fritz Lang's "Metropolis." A cast of 12 led by Philip Mados and Nurse Deans Poster wand their Madoc and Nyree Dawn Porter wend their way through a labyrinthine plot about bankrupt banks and murderous drug-dealers and fraudulent power games against a downtown-jungle setting by Voytak that is often the most dramatic thing happening on stage.

But in there somewhere is an attempt to do for the back allege of the Culery Legisland for the back alleys of the Sydney banking district what David Hare once did for the soft underbelly of the Home Counties. There still seems to me something curious about the way that the London critical and arts establishment persistently falls over itself to welcome anything new from the Continent, while relegating the wealth of current Aus-tralian drama to a kind of outback.

Soon to leave Chichester and make its way to the West End, Elijah Moshinsky's rare revival of the Jean Anouith-Christopher Fry "Ring Round the Moon" is a flaccid affair, fatally flawed by the coziness of the central casting. Neither Googie Withers as a gently eccentric dowager, nor Michael Denison doing funny-old-man walks as her butler, nor Holly Aird as the innocent ballerina abroad in a world of corrupt aristocrats, begin to only 10, but after nearly 40 years I can remember whole scenes between Margaret Rutherford and Paul Scofield whereas after only a matter of days I find it hard to recall anything at all about the present and totally bland production. But this production is worth seeing for the British stage debut of José Ferrer, in wonderful form as the ancient millionaire, and for June Whitfield as the dancer's socially ambitions mother. It also raises all manner of questions about Chichester's future as it moves into a new era with a new (though as yet unappointed) director and a new studio theater across from the main house. Now more than ever, Chichester needs a director of flair and vision and dramatic experience: Now, therefore, would surely be the moment to invite John Neville back from a long Canadian exile to a theater that he, more than any other director or actor of his generation, is qualified to program and run.

Kafka Script on Block

LONDON — The manuscript of Franz Kafka's "The Trial" is to be sold Nov. 17 in London, Sotheby's has announced. The auction firm called it "the most important modern literary manuscript ever at auction," and said it expected to fetch £1 million ($1.7 million), well above the present record for a literary item, set last year Kafka's correspondence with his fiancée. "The Trial," written in German on 316 notebook pages, was published in 1925, the year after his death.

Dow Edges Up in Slow Trading

NEW YORK - Stock prices posted modest ains Tuesday in slow trading on the New York Stock Exchange, as stocks linked to takeovers dominated an otherwise trendless session.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which fell 17.07 points Monday, rose 6.40 to close at Advances led declines by about a 9-6 ratio. Big Board volume totaled 142.22 million shares, compared with 135.77 million traded Monday. "We were up for most of the day and still couldn't really get anything going," said Jon Groveman, head of equity trading at Ladenburg. Thalmann & Co. "We spent the day recogning some of Monday's losses but trading recouping some of Monday's losses, but trading was very nondescript. What seems to be impeding the stock market is the bond market," he said.

"Bonds are refusing to rally, despite lower crude oil prices and another down day for gold. People are saying if bonds can't get going, why should stocks," said Mr. Groveman.

Broad market indexes also managed only slight gains. The New York Stock Exchange index rose 0.52 to 152.44. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 0.91 to 269.73. The price of an average share added 11 cents. The latest news on the economy appeared to have little impact on trading. U.S. gross national product expanded at a revised annual rate of 3 percent in the second quarter, down from last month's estimate of 3.3 percent. While the GNP report suggested a moderation in economic growth, it also con-

ained an upward revision in a key inflation

"But the market doesn't seem to care at this point," Mr. Chalasani said. "Right now there seems to be some buying ahead of the closing of the quarter. "Before Monday's pullback, the market had moved from 1,990 in mid-August to 2,100," he said. "As a result, some portfolio managers might be a little uptight with high cash re-SCIVES."

Kroger was the most active issue, jumping 3% to 56%. The company said it had received an unsolicited takeover proposal from Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co.

Phillips Petroleum followed, up % to 199 Baxter Travenol was third, down % to 20%. Time Inc. plunged 10% to 106, after the company denied that a leveraged buyout was under consideration. AT&T rose ¼ to 26½. IBM was unchanged at

Among other blue chips, General Electric was unchanged at 43%, General Motors was off 4 to 74%, USX was down % to 27% and Merck was unchanged at 57%.

Prices closed narrowly mixed in slow trading on the American Stock Exchange.

The American Stock Exchange index rose 0.96 to 298.63. The average price of a share gained 2 cents. Declines, however, edged advances by a 7-5 margin. Volume totaled 9.95 million shares, compared with 8.43 million traded Monday.

The 'New' New York Post Gets Upscale Advertisers SEDUL CHOS

By RANDALL ROTHENBERG

New York Times Service

EW YORK - Six months after its new owner promised to tone down The New York Post's sensationalism, the newspaper said that four of New York's most stylish retailers would begin regular advertising. Bloomingdale's, Saks Fifth Avenue, Bergdorf Goodman and B. Altman will begin scheduled advertising in The Post during the week of Oct. 3, said Peter O. Price, the newspaper's publisher. All the ads will run on the paper's seventh page, opposite one of the Post's most popular features, "Page Six," which offers celebrity and society gossip.

The retailers are confirming what we said we'd be able to do reposition the paper in a short time to take out some of the lund elements that were offending people and gain re-spectability," said Mr. Price, who took over as publisher in March after Peter S. Kalikow, a New York real estate developer, purchased the Post from Rupert Murdoch for $37 million.

Mr. Price said no special discounts or promotions had been offered to the stores. Each store will run one or two advertisements a week, two columns or less in size, at least through the end of the year, he added.

Since a full-page retail ad in The Post, given normal volume discounts, would cost around $5,000, that schedule is too meager to add significantly to the paper's revenue. But the prominent resistance of ade from such practice lader stores represents a positioning of ads from such prestige-laden stores represents a dramatic advance in the paper's effort to re-establish its credibility with the New York department stores.

The new advertising will include general merchandise, ranging from cut-price cosmeries to full-price men's and women's clothing and accessories.

The vice president for sales promotion administration at Bergdorf, Mitchell B. Fox, refused to confirm Mr. Price's announcement. Executives at the other stores said they would begin advertising in two weeks.

XECUTIVES at several of the stores said they had been impressed by editorial changes instituted by Mr. Price and Jane Amsterdam, a former magazine editor who became The Post's editor three months ago.

"More and more I'm hearing from my friends that they are reading The New York Post, and my friends are our customers," said Lester Gribetz, Bloomingdale's executive vice president. He cited particularly the addition of Jeane Kirkpatrick, the former U.S. representative at the United Nations, as a syndicated columnist, as well as the reduction in "shocking" headlines. Retail executives also said they had been attracted by the elimination of "Wingo" and other games that artificially inflated The Post's circulation, to a high of 960,000. The circulation had dropped to less than half a million at the time Mr. Kalikow purchased the paper but has since climbed back to 600,000, Mr.

The Post's retail advertising also has begun to rebound. It was down by nearly 40 percent in the first quarter of 1988 from the year before and "had all but disappeared," Mr. Price said. He added that most of that loss had been recovered.

But while retail executives said they were giving a vote of confidence to The Post, they added that they intended to test to determine whether the paper delivered its readers.
"We will advertise merchandise in the Post that is not the same as in The New York Times," said Paul Leblang, the senior vice president for marketing at Saks Inc. "If we have Brand X' of a men's suit in the Times, we'll have 'Brand Y' in The Post. Then try to take a look at the results at the New

Edelman Has Stake In Lonrho

Arbitrager's Plan Appears Unclear

LONDON -- Loncho PLC said Tuesday that Asher B. Edelman, the New York-based corporate raider, and associated groups have built up a stake of at least 3.79 percent in the British-based con-

Lonrho said it has been advised that stock purchases by Mr. Edel-man are continuing. The disclosure follows three weeks of unusually heavy trading in Lourho stock, with hints from the company that a U.S. purchaser might be behind it. Lonrho said in a statement that the unusual activity in its stock since Sept. 5 had been handled mainly by two London brokers on behalf of Hentsch & Compagnie, a Geneva-based Swiss bank The company said that it is making further inquiries into the fund-ing and ultimate ownership and control of Mr. Edelman's holding, and there was no indication late Tuesday of the arbitrager's imme-

Market sources said before Loutho's announcement that the buying party is believed to have built up about a 5 percent stake in the group, a level that must be disclosed under British takeover Lonrho jumped to the top of the active list on the London Stock Exchange before the disclosure. It touched a day's high of 292 peace ($4.90) but eased to close at 290 pence, compared with 269.5 pence Monday, when investors decided that the stake builder did not appear to be a potential bidder for the group, dealers said.

But market analysts said that a bid for Loutho could not be ruled

Euan Worthington at Warburg Securities said that the company, which has interests that range from hotels tomining, had an asset value of about £5 per share. "You cannot discount a bid at this level," he

Before the announcement, Paul Spicer, a director of Lonrho, said that the party building the stake had not informed the company about its intentions.

Analysis said about 15 percent of the Lonrho equity is held by its chief executive, Roland (Tiny)

NEW YURK — A lawyer re-leased a letter to Lafarge Coppée SA on Tuesday that said an inves-tor group wanted to buy its 57 percent stake in Lafarge Corp. for $30 a share, but the French compa-ny said it was not interested and analysts said they did not take the offer extinuoly. Currency Per S

Stock in Lafarge Corp., one of the largest North American makers of cement and building materials, rose $1.625 to $19.625 a share on the New York Stock Exchange.

The stock had been halted earlier in the day in connection with the letter and Lafarge's response, and there had been indications of demand at up to $27 a share.

But it reopened at $19.75, as ana lysts and traders questioned the Lafarge Coppée owns about 57 percent of Lafarge Corp.'s 49 million fully diluted shares.

Lawrence F. Orbe 3d, the lawyer said the investor group holds a small amount of Lafarge stock. He added that their stake was less than the 5 percent level that would require an informational filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

He would not provide further de-ais about the clients but said their offer was contingent upon obtaining federal antitrust clearance, sufficient financing and no opposition from the board of Lafarge Coppée, a Paris-based cement producer.

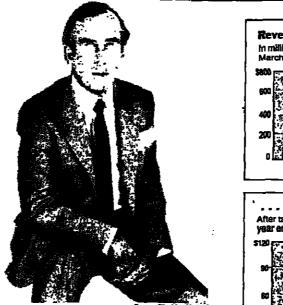

"For now, the feeling is we want to meet with the parent company to disclose the backgrounds of the principals," Mr. Orbe said. "That's the most appropriate way.

It was the second time this month that the group had approached Lafarge Coppee about selling the company. The earlier offer, also for $30 share, was only for the Fernal re, was only for the French parent's controlling interest. The letter said "to the extent that you believe that discussions with us would be fruitful in identifying greater values, we are willing to meet with you to discuss the modification of our proposal."

A $30-per-share bid would value
Lafarge Corp. at about $1.5 billion. In Reston, Virginia, Lafarge Corp. said that there was disseminated over wire services "yet another" unsolicited letter to Lafarge Coppee from a lawyer who purports to represent an unidentified group of Lafarge stockholders.

GPA Group's Growing Business

Tony Ryan, the Irish entrepreneur, was a pioneer in aircraft leasing. His GPA Group Ltd. is now world leader in the business.

Tony Ryan's Niche Comes of Age Pioneer of Aircraft Leasing Boom Reaps the Rewards

By Steve Lohr

New York Times Service
SHANNON, Ireland — Thirteen years ago,
Tony Ryan was a middle-level manager at Aer Lingus, Ireland's state-owned airline. When he left to start his own business, with $5,000 in savings, colleagues thought him foolish for giving up a steady if modest salary and a secure future. Today, largely because of the tremendous growth of the aircraft-leasing business and his success in building GPA Group Ltd. into the world leader in the industry, Mr. Ryan's personal wealth stands at an estimated $200 million, making him one of Ireland's richest people and one of its bestknown business executives. Mr. Ryan, 52, lives on a 300-acre estate in Tipperary, where he raises cattle and maintains an impressive collection of 19th and 20th-century paintings. Recently, he has become perhaps the top-private patron of the arts in Ireland, financing lucrative prizes for artists, authors and musicians. The wealth and its trappings have been Mr. Ryan's reward for being a pioneer in aircraft "The leasing industry has come of age," Mr. Ryan said recently in his Tipperary office. "Leasing is now part of the fabric of the aviation industry."

As leasing has entered the mainstream, GPA has profited handsomely. Since 1984, the company's net income has jumped more than eightfold, to $101.3 million in the year ended last March. Over the same period, revenue has increased more than seven times, to $649.6 million. For the current fiscal year, profit is expected to rise 31 percent, to Even Mr. Ryan acknowledges that he did not foresee how lucrative leasing was to become. But more than a decade ago, he did see the direction. Deregulation and increased competition internationally have meant that many airlines prefer to lease costly new planes rather than buy them. Leasing offers financial flexibility for both new and established airlines. For example, it drastically lowers the start-up costs for new airlines, such as the discount-fare charter carriers, mainly based in Britain, that have proliferated during the 1980s and now account for 65 percent of Europe's total air traffic. The competitive turnoil in the industry has also made leasing more attractive to established airlines. Some are so financially pinched that they cannot finance their own fleet-upgrading programs. But others, even big well-heeled carriers, choose to lease some of their planes for the flexibil ity it gives them.

The average life of an aircraft is at least 20 years; airline planning cycles are typically five years.

Once, airlines could plan for certain levels of passenger traffic at given prices years in advance with considerable confidence. But not anymore. The practice of leasing aircraft has been around for more than a decade, but it has become com-

Japan Economy Fell at 3.9% Clip In 2d Quarter

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches

TOKYO — Japan's gross na-tional product shrank during the second quarter of this year at an annual rate of 3.9 percent, in part because of lower demand for Japanese exports and falling investment in housing, the government annonneed on Tuesday.

a slowdown to a pace of economic growth that economists viewed as more sustainable than the 11.3 percent registered in first quarter. At the same time, the second-quarter figures raised the issue of whether Japan would measure up to the 5 percent growth widely anricipated for the year to March 31, 1989. The government's growth target for the year is 3.8 percent.

It also furthered concern that Japan's efforts to reduce dependence on exports would be compromised.

The decline in the total value of goods and services produced in Japan during the April-June period was the first quarter-on-quarter contraction in the country's economy since January-March 1986, when the economy briefly declined under the impact of the sharply

On an inflation-adjusted basis, the Japanese gross national product fell 1.0 percent from the previous three months, compared with a 2.7 percent quarterly rise in the January-March period.

Government officials said a 1.5 percent decline in foreign demand for Japanese products and services and a downtim in private housing investment over the previous quarter's levels more than offset a modest growth in domestic personal consumption and private capital

The greatest declines were in the yen value of exports of televisions. videotape recorders, radios and

Despite the downturn, government representatives said Japan's economy remained fundamentally

"It's still showing a positive progression overall," said one official, who asked not to be identified.

A senior official at the Economic Planning Agency said Japan is likely to show growth of 4 percent in the current fiscal year.

He said the economy would resume growing in the July-Septem-ber quarter, and he said the drop in the previous period represented a shift from rapid expansion to moderate growth. "We have been hoping for a moderate growth rate without in-flation," said Masaru Takagi, an economist at Fuji Bank Ltd. "The economy had expanded very dramatically in the first quarter of this year and if this condition had continued, sooner or later inflation would have occurred." Economists have been especially worried that brisk consumer and corporate demand was pushing production by many Japanese manufacturers to the limit, thereby putting upward pressure on prices. "There's no reason to think that Japanese economic expansion has ended," said Kenji Ito, senior economist for Industrial Bank of Japan. The fall in housing investments is a little steeper than expected, but on the whole we thought the numbers would be in this range." The Economic Planning Agency had predicted earlier that the second-quarter GNP would remain unchanged or decline slightly from the previous quarter after statistics showed housing starts peaking.

Housing construction had boomed because of low interest rates and huge government expen-ditures in public works, which stimulated construction and other (AP, Reuters, IHT) industries.

Hershey Targets Europe For New Food Ventures

HERSHEY, Pennsylvania - After shedding Friendly Ice Cream Corp. this summer, Hershey Foods Corp. is looking for new ventures, particularly in Europe, according to its chief executive officer, Richard Zimmerman.

"The sale of Friendly gives us a new piece of work to do. I'd like to think there'd be opportunity for new ventures and work with people in international markets, especially Europe," Mr. Zimmerman said Monday.

He said that Hershey would look for overseas were trues in consumer food products and in the ventures in consumer food products and in the confectionery market.

Historically, Hershey's international sales have accounted for less than 5 percent of total nave accounted for less than 5 percent of total revenue, analysts said.

Mr. Zimmerman said Hershey expected to reap an extraordinary gain of $50 million in 1988 from its sale of Friendly Ice Cream for $375 million in August to Chicago-based Tennessee Restaurant Co.

He said the company will issue a restatement of 1987 and 1988 earnings in early to mid-November to reflect both the sale of Friendly and the company's purchase of the U.S. confer-

November to reflect both the sale of Friendly and the company's purchase of the U.S. confectionery operations of Cadbury Schweppes PLC in July.

Hershey has agreed to pay Cadbury an additional $11 million as part of a royalty and technical agreement. It will pay $5 million per year for technical assistance over 10 years and $6 million this year in royalty fees for Cadbury's various candy brands.

"We've focused our attention pretty heavily on a few European confectionery businesses in the recent past, but prices are very high and returns have not been good in Europe," Mr. He noted that growth in U.S. confectionery consumption has been slow but said a current consolidation within the U.S. and European confectionery industry will make the "market sharper and stronger year by year" due to in-creased marketing promotions by fewer, bigger

Mr. Zimmerman added, "I think Jacobs Suchard AG will give us more competition than we've hat." Last year, the Swiss-based Suchard bought E.J. Brach and Sons, a big U.S. seller of

Market observers also said they believed that Suchard would use Brach's U.S. distribution system to push its chocolates, which include Toblerone, Andes Candies and Cote d'Or

NEW YORK — International Business Machines Corp. said Tuesday it has introduced about 50 new or enhanced telecommunications products that, it said, made it easier for customers to operate their computer networks and communicate with non-IBM networks. IBM said the new products include three that take advantage of Open Systems Interconnection, an international standard that allows computers from different manufacturers to communicate with one another. The computer maker also announced its first product designed for Integrated Services Digi-

Bundesbank Chief Says Inflation Fears Fading

By Hobart Rowen

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Karl Otto Pohl, president of the Bundesbank, said Tuesday that inflationary expectations that had troubled world financial markets earlier this year have begun to fade, thanks to the co-ordinated effort of central bankers to tighten interest rates. He said that action by the Federre said that action by the Yest German central bank and by others "a keserve Board, by the West German central bank and by others "gave a signal to the markets that in action to the illness of the emperor," said Bob White, a dealer with

LONDON - Nigel Lawson, the British chancellor of the Exchanger, said Tuesday he is comfortable with current exchange rates, including that of the British pound.

Asked during a press briefing about exchange rates among the Group of Seven industrialized countries, Mr. Lawson said, "I think most of us are comfortable with the rates that there are at the present time." Asked later if that applied to sterling, he said it did.

The pound closed at $1.6845 in London on Tuesday and ended at about 3.14 DM. The dollar closed at 1.8645 Deutsche marks.

The dollar/Dentsche mark rate is bang in the Louvre range now," Mr. Lawson said, referring to the values agreed to by the industrialized countries at a February 1987 meeting in the Louvre. The Louvre Accord ranges have not been made public.

"As far as the dollar/yen range is concerned," said Mr. Lawson, the yen is now higher, but I think that is wholly appropriate with the Japanese economy's performance," he said. He added that he thought West Germany, at the time of the Louvre agreement, would have liked to have seen the yen "a little bit higher" against the mark, "so I think there is general satisfaction."

Speaking before his departure for the Berlin meetings, Mr. Lawson said that international economic cooperation is working very well. The recent wave of interest rate increases had been wholly appropriate in both national and international terms, he said.

Hachette Buys Elle in U.S. Murdoch Sells to Pay for Triangle

NEW YORK - Hachette SA said it agreed to buy the 50 percent stake in U.S. and British editions of Elle magazine that it doesn't already own from Rupert Murdoch's News Corp. Ltd. for an undisclosed sam.

Earlier Tuesday, News Corp. said it officially entered into a merger agreement to buy Triangle Publications Inc., the publisher of TV Guide, the Daily Racing Form and Seventeen, for $3 billion. The deal was previously announced.

Mr. Murdoch had said that part of the Triangle purchase would be financed through asset sales. Last month, a spokes-man said Mr. Murdoch was selling his stake in Reuters Holdings PLC to help finance the deal.

The U.S. edition of Elle, a monthly fashion magazine, was started in a joint venture in 1985 between News Corp. and Hachette, a French publishing concern. Hachette and Mr. Murdoch also jointly own Sky magazine in Britain and Premier in the United States.

"Elle is the flagship of Ha-chette," said Didier Guerin, president of Hachette Publications Inc. "This was an oppor timity to get back the other 50 percent

Paris Bourse Admits Large Trade Backlog

PARIS - Authorities at the Paris Bourse acknowledged that incorrect processing of share transactions has left the Bourse with a backlog of 12 billion francs ($1.89 billion) in unsettled transactions.

In a statement issued late Monday, the Paris stockbrokers association admitted that 320,000 transactions were unsettled at the end of August. French press reports said computer problems and unauthorized transactions by dealers accounted for some of the backlog.

It should be possible to rapidly settle two-thirds of the transactions, mostly small deals worth a total of about 2 billion francs, the Bourse association said.

But the newspaper Le Monde reported Tuesday that 120,000 more transactions - worth about 10 billion francs - could be difficult to handle. Some of the orders simply got lost in the computer system, it

Journal des Finances, a financial publication, reported Saturday that certain transactions may have consisted of sales of customers' securities without their knowledge by dealers who have had to cope with substantial losses, especially on the financial futures market, the MATIF.

The Saturday report said the Bourse was faced with a backlog of between 500,000 and 600,000 of unsettled deals worth about 45 billion francs.

The association statement on Monday said that in a majority of the litigious deals, customers selling secu-rities were unable to deliver them or buyers were unable to pay for them. Pending transactions less than three months old are not considered litigious, it added.

The MATIF, which opened in 1986, has been hit by several scandals in the past 12 months, including a loss of 500 million francs in speculative operations by the association's own guarantee fund.

"This should be it," said a trader. "I wouldn't think we would see anyone come in after this, although you never know."

A Dart spokesman, Stanley Rubenstein, said the Landover, Maryland-based company had no comment on the competing Kohlberg.

Kroger stock soared after the Kohlberg, Kravis announcement, closing at $56.25 a share, up $3.50 from Monday in New York Stock Exchange composite trading.

From Kohlberg Kravis Herbert and Robert Haft, the father and son who head Dart Group, have made millions as corporate raiders who bid for companies and later withdraw their offers, sciling stakes that have greatly increased in value. The Hafts have failed in other efforts to buy supermarket compa-nies and retailers. Among the concerns they have targeted are Safeway Stores, Supermarkets General Corp., Stop & Shop Cos. and Dayton-Hudson Corp.

Kroger said it was reviewing the proposal by Kohlberg, Kravis, which it said was unsolicited. The Wall Street concern said the supermarket company had refused to meet over a possible bid.

Elizabeth M. Shiels, an analyst with the investment firm Hilliard Lyons Inc. in Louisville, Kentucky, said the added pressure on Kroger made it likely the company would sell off some of its assets - either as part of the proposed restructuring or under new ownership.

Kroger operates more than 1,300 supermarkets, 935 convenience stores and 15 membership warehouses in 29 states. It also processa variety of food products for sale in its retail stores and to out-

A Very Private Banker Takes Venture to Public

Edmond Safra, Adviser to the Rich, Raising Capital of Geneva-Based Concern

By Steve Lohr New York Times Service

LONDON — After three years on the sidelines, Edmond J. Safra, the reclusive billionaire banker, has returned to his Geneva stronghold and his favorite field of private banking from Switzerland - providing exclusive banking services to the nich.

International private banking is nothing new to Mr. Safra, 56, whose banking roots go back five generations, to the time when his family helped finance the Ottoman Empire's caravan trade. With Edmond Salra in the lead, the family of Lebanese-born Jews now controls banks worldwide that are known for cautious dealing and secrecy. They include institutions in Switzerland, Brazil, Italy, Monte Carlo, France, Luxembourg and Florida Most of the banks are privately held, but Mr. Safra is also the founder and largest shareholder in the Republic National Bank of New York, in which he holds a one-

"Edmond Safra heads a banking dynasty," noted Mark Alpert, an analyst for Bear, Steams & Co. "But the Safra name is far better known in Europe than in the

Edmond J. Safra

The pull of the Safra name in Europe will be crucial to his most recent venture, Safra Republic Holdings SA, a Geneva-based bank holding concern. Founded last March as Republic National Bank of New York (Suisse) SA with $430 million in capital, the renamed Safra Republic announced Tuesday that it plans to raise $450 million in new equity to accelerate its marketing strategy. Mr. Safra declined to be specific about his plans in private banking, but it was clear he does not intend to stray from his cauMr. Safra is reaching into his own pocket for $200 million of the equity. An additional $250 million to $300 million is to come from an international equity offering to individual and institutional investors, which is expected to be launched in October. The initial $430 million investment, through Republic National Bank of New York, will remain.

It is because of the public offering, and the urging of under-writers, that Mr. Safra departed from his lifetime practice of avoiding the press, and gave four individual interviews on Tuesday. A senior banking associate and a public relations consultant were present at each session.

"I try to remain unknown as much as possible," Mr. Safra explained.

But in international financial circles, the Safra name is well-known. Much of Mr. Safra's world-wide reputation is based on the extraordinary growth of Trade Development Bank, which he founded in the 1950s with roughly $1 million of his own money, to tap the Swiss privatebanking market. By 1983, when Trade Development Bank had deposits of nearly $5 billion, he sold it to American Express Co. for $550 million. Mr. Safra left in 1985 and agreed not to set up a competing private bank for three

When the three-year agree-ment expired earlier this year, Mr. Safra established a competing bank. No one was surprised,

It is clear that Safra Republic intends to be a formidable competitor in private banking. Its Geneva branch already has deposits of $1 billion and, according to one analyst's estimate, the total assets including Safra Republic's offices in France, Luxembourg, the Channel Islands and Gibraliar are nearly $2.5 billion.

In the view of Mr. Safra and his principal shareholders, private banking in Europe is ripe for expansion as the European Comnunity moves toward a single market in 1992, and currency controls in most countries are Caution, confidentiality and service are the hallmarks of the Safra approach.

"You can take a chance in life, but not with a bank," Mr. Safra continued. "A bank is not a playground. Banking is conservatism. And it has been the same for a few thousand years"

Mr. Worthington said that the impending sale by the British conclomerate Grand Metropolitan PLC of its Inter-Continental hotel chain, with a price tag of £1.5 billion, had focused investor attention on Lonrho's hotels.

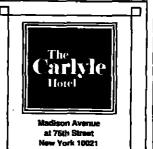

He said that the attraction of these alone would be likely to outweigh areas that a potential bidder might find unattractive, such as Lonrho's holdings in South Africa.

Buys Reda From TRW

LONDON - Pearson PLC said Tuesday that Camco Inc., its oilservices unit, agreed to buy the Reda Pump and Oilwell Cable divi-sions of TRW Inc. of the United States for $303 million.

The price represents twice the combined annual sales of Reda, which is based in Bartlesville, Oklahoma, and its associated unit, Oilwell, based in Lawrence, Kansas. The deal is expected to be completed by the end of September.

Reda is the world leader in electric submersible pumps and its acquisition will give Pearson as significant a role in the oil-services business as it has in publishing." Lord Blakenham, the chairman of Pearson, said in a statement.

Pearson owns the Financial Times, half of the Economist Newspaper Ltd., regional newspapers, major book publishers and has interests in merchant banking entertainment, fine china and vineyards. In July, Pearson said it would sell its British oil exploration and production subsidiary, Whitehall Petro-leum Ltd., to Amerada Hess Ltd. for £94 million ($157.8 million).

Camco is a leading maker and supplier of gas-lift equipment, safe-ty systems, drilling bits and related services for the energy industry.

Pearson was recently was approached about a possible merger by Reed International, another British publishing concern.

Stock in Pearson sank 20 pence to 716 peace on the London Stock Exchange on Tuesday on the news of the Reda purchase.

"As with any company, the more acquisitions Pearson makes the more difficult it will be to swallow," a dealer in London said.

Pearson said the Reda acquisition is a further step in a strategy by Camco to gain global leadership in the high-quality market for oil-field equipment and services. The purchase will be funded mainly from liquid resources, with the balance coming from existing borrowing facilities, Pearson said. TRW is involved in the defense, automotive and informations systems businesses.

Reda has operations in Austra-lia, Canada, Singapore, the United Arab Emirates and Britain. (Reuters, UPI)

Pearson Unit Clyde Petroleum to Buy Newmont Interests

LONDON — Clyde Petroleum PLC, the oil exploration concern, said Tuesday that it plans to buy the Netherlands North Sea oil and gas interests of Newmont Mining Corp. of the United States for

The British company said it would seek to raise £121 million ($203 million) in a rights issue of stock to fund the purchase.

Newmont's assets represent a prime portfolio of producing, proven undeveloped and exploration assets that would bring benefits of scale and geographical spread to Clyde, the oil explorer said. Following the acquisition, its production is to exceed 20,000 barrels a day of oil equivalent into the 1990s,

The purchase would increase Clyde's proven reserves by about 46 percent, and its proven producing reserves by about 76 percent.

124.17 million shares at 100 pence each. Clyde stock eased 10 pence on the London Stock Exchange on Tuesday, falling to 118 pence.

Clyde stockholders representing 43.9 percent of its issued share capital have undertaken to subscribe in full to the rights issue, and the merchant bank, County NatWest Ltd., has underwritten the balance, the company said. The acquisition and rights issue are conditional on approval by Clyde shareholders at an Oct. 6 meeting. Clyde is to pay $181.3 million to Newmont for the oil and gas interests and would be responsible for discharging $6.3 million of intra-group liabilities; $31.7 million of liabilities to Newmont's bankers; and $15 million of tax and other tious approach.

The reserves total 260 billion cabic feet of gas and the equivalent of 3 million cubic feet in oil and condensate, according to the Robertson ERC consultancy, Clyde said. Cash flow from the interests was $33.2 million in 1987, while pretax profit to Newmont was $10.8 milion that year. Unaudited accounts put cash flow in the first half of this year at $17.7 million and pretax profit at $5.5 million. Cash flow from the purchases would strengthen Clyde's balance sheet with a minimal increase in overhead, and the enlarged group would have the resources to finance wider exploration program. Newmont already has sold more than $600 million of assets this year to help reduce a heavy debt burden, largely incurred to finance a $33 per share special dividend.

The Board of Directors, convened on 19th September 1988, appointed Mr Lindsay OWEN-JONES Chairman and Chief Executive officer of L'OREAL and confirmed Mr Marc LADREIT de LACHARRIERE's position as Executive Vice President and member of the Board of Directors.

Mr Charles ZVIAK, who was Chairman of L'OREAL since 1984, had announced last year that he did not wish to continue as Chairman after September 1988.

The Board of Directors expressed their warm thanks to Mr Charles ZVIAK for having continued the work undertaken by Mr Eugène SCHÜELLER and Mr François DALLE at the head of L'OREAL, the world leader in cosmetics.

Hershiser, who struck out five and walked none, is tied with Jackson for the league lead with 22 victories and 14 complete games. Jackson (22-7) allowed two runs and seven hits over 71/3 innings to move Cincinnati into second place in the Western Division, 91/2 games behind Los Angeles, with a 7-2 home triumph over San Diego.

Pagel and Browns Beat Colts, 23-17

United Press International CLEVELAND - Mike Pagel, making his first start in three seasons, threw two scoring passes and Matt Bahr kicked three field goals Monday night to power the Cleve-land Browns to a 23-17 National Football League victory over the ndianapolis Colts.

The Browns won despite a 117yard rushing effort by Eric Dicker-son and a 73-yard TD punt return by Clarence Verdin.

Pagel, Cleveland's third starting quarterback in three weeks following injuries to Bernie Kosar and Gary Danielson, completed 23 of 38 passes for 255 yards and two touchdowns; he was intercepted once by his former team. The seven-year veteran, who had not started since Dec. 22, 1985, threw TD passes of 14 yards to Ozzie Newsome and 17 yards to Webster Slaughter.

Umpire Quits

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK — Umpire Dave Pallone of the National League resigned Monday under pressure.

Pallone, 37, had feuded with several ballplayers and managers, and admitted to having run up gam-bling debts on sports other than baseball. He was ostracized by some colleagues because he had been hired during the 1979 umpire strike. He never joined the umpires'

Involved early this season in an incident with Pete Rose that result-ed in the Cincinnati Manager's 30day suspension. Pallone was told by league officials he could resign now or be fired at the end of the season, sources close to the situation said. Pallone's late call on a play first base in a game between the Reds and New York April 30 triggered Rose's charge from the dugout. Rose bumped Pallone twice, but said the umpire had poked him in the face first. Rose, ejected, was subsequently fined and suspended. Pallone had to leave the game briefly after the crowd at Cincinnat's Riverfront Stadium began showering the field with debris.

Pallone frequently was among the lowest-rated umpires in terms of performance and was up for league review at the end of the season, at which time he would have been rehired and given tenure, or released.

Pallone could not be reached for comment on Tuesday, but Rose said, "You can't convince me he was let go because of the confrontation I had with him. Why wait that (UPI, AP)

A's Win American League West

Stan Javier, left, and Ron Hassey embraced reliever Dennis Eckersley after the Athletics beat Minnesota, 5-3, Monday night in Oakland, California, to clinch the crown in the American League's Western Division. The A's have been in first place since April 21; with 96 victories, they already have more than the 1972-74 Oakland teams, all of which won World Series titles.

An Already Surprising Tourney a Benefit to Soccer OLYMPIC RESULTS

KWANGJU, South Korea -Soccer memories are made of nights in Rio, in Madrid, in Frankfurt. But one for the record books happened at Kwangju Stadium on Monday.

Here, 400 kilometers (250 miles) south of Seoul, there came Olympic soccer's biggest upset since Japan Seat Sweden in 1936:

Zambia 4, Italy 0. As word spread like bushfire, recomplacency, to speculation that his is the dawn of African soccer. The first is too glib. When a team outplays its opponent for as long as Zambia did Italy, you cannot insult the performance. You may as well But your head where ostriches bury theirs. The other responses are truer. Italian players are sometimes congenitally convinced of their superiority and sometimes undone by neurosis. At the 1966 World Cup, Italy underestimated North Korea and lost, 1-0, and during the 1982 finals Italy was lucky to draw with Cameroon.

To lose by one goal can be considered careless; to lose by four is to court humiliation in a big way. We often see Italian talents squandered through arrogance and/or fear. But why blame the loser? It could be that Zambia had something to do with its astonishing triumph.

As I wrote after last spring's African Nations Cup, the day of the African was coming. I hadn't expected anything so soon or so grand. But it was obvious in Africa that individual skill born in bush and backstreet, harnessed primarily by

We recommend, you never stretch out in our Slumberettes without asking for a wake-up call.

We may come from the land of clocks but we still believe our First Class travellers deserve to be woken in a rather more gentle manner: by one of our charming flight attendants. Alarm calls are something they're used to making, particularly on our long-haul flights. After all, with a comfortable back rest, reclining seat and flexible footrest, your Slumberette adjusts to vour body automatically. In fact, it's the next best thing to your bed at home. However, there is a snag: wouldn't it be a pity to sleep away the luxurious atmosphere and legendary hospitality of our First Class service?

Coaches Distraught but U.S. Boxer Takes His Disqualification in Stride

By Michael Wilbon

Washington Post Service SEOUL - Hank Johnson wasn't crying, but his face couldn't have expressed any more anguish if

Johnson, assistant coach for the U.S. boxing team, walked out of Chamsil Student Gymnasium late Monday night without the faintest idea of what to say to Anthony

As Hembrick, a middleweight, left the gym with Johnson, he told reporters his case hadn't been resolved, that his appeal was still being considered. But in fact it had been resolved. Johnson just couldn't tell him that the appeal had been denied and that he was out of the Olympics.

So they got into a taxi and headed for the Olympic Village. The taxi was ironic since Hembrick ed for the Olympic Village. The taxi was ironic since Hembrick "I said, Hank, why are you being could still be in the Olympics if he so quiet. You must be quiet for a had taken one that morning. Instead, they waited 30 minutes for a bus, after misreading the bout schedule, and Hembrick was disqualified because he didn't show up in time for his fight. A Korean boxer was declared the winner.

And now, here was Johnson, sitting beside Hembrick in a taxi, trying to decide what to say.

Johnson had been in a similar position with Hembrick once before, in April 1986. Hembrick's brother, Damon, had been stabbed to death at a McDonald's in Detroit, where he worked. "It seems," Johnson said, "I'm always the one to bring bad news to him."

As they got out of the taxi, John-on still hadn't said a word. Hem-

One U.S. Boxer Comes Early, And Stays On in Competition

SEOUL - Kenneth Gould may not have been sure he was going to win his first bout, but he sure wasn't going to be late for it.

Fighting a day after U.S. teammate Anthony Hembrick was disqualified for arriving too late for his bout, Gould got to the Olympic boxing competition Tuesday more than three hours early. Gould came so early he couldn't get one of the tiny locker rooms at the Chamshil Student Gymnasium. He ended up lying on the arena floor resting as the crowd filed in for the morning session. But once he did get in the ring, Gould's 4-1 decision over Tanzania's Joseph Marwa evened the U.S. team's record at 2-2.

"It doesn't matter if it's three hours, you just got to get here be-fore the bout starts," said Gould, a world champion at 147 pounds (66.5 kilograins).

U.S. boxing coaches weren't about to take a chance with Gould gerting to the fight late. Not after Hembrick lost his chance at a medal because the coaches couldn't read the bout schedule and he later could not get on a crowded bus. Gould "was on the very first bus this morning," said the U.S. coach,

A few hours after Gould won his fight, the U.S. team failed in a last-ditch appeal of Hembrick's disqualification to Juan António Samaranch, president of the International Olympic Committee. Samaranch agreed to meet and dis-cuss the matter with Anwar Chowdhry, head of the International Amateur Boxing Federation, but the decision stood. Ha Jong Ho of South Korea, who advanced on Hembrick's disqualification, fought Tnesday and was eliminated by Svem Otike of West Germany on a 4-1 decision in the 165-pound division.

That made South Korean fighters 4-1 in the tournament, while those from the Soviet Union were undefeated after six bouts. Five had scored convincing first round victories, while the other gained a walkover. Only two of the fights lasted the distance, with both going to the Soviets on a 5-0 verdict.

Tuesday, Ruslan Taramov scored the second fastest knockout to date when he felled Sierra Leone's Samuel Simbo 1:01 into the first round of their middleweight Hembrick's disqualification had come only hours after Kelcie Banks, a world champion at 125 pounds, was knocked out in the first round of his opening round bout and eliminated. That put even more pressure on Gould to restore some confidence among the U.S.

'It was almost like the whole team was on his shoulders," said

Finally, Johnson told him: "We didn't get the decision." Hembrick said that when he got the news, "I shed a few tears, yeah,

It was a dream I held for years. It was taken from me so quickly, so fast. I lost so much. I can't even go back to Detroit and say to my friends, I boxed in the Olympics, becanse I didn't."

Johnson himself didn't know what to feel. Boxers depend on coaches to tell them things like what time bouts are scheduled to

Johnson recalled the time in 1972 that two U.S. sprinters missed their race because the coach misread the schedule. Johnson said he thought at the time, "How could a coach let that happen?" And now he had let it happen to a young man he has cared for deep-ly for five years. "If you've ever coached an athlete you know they put total trust in their coach," he said, "and there's nothing wrong with that." Once Hembrick reached Adams, the coach hugged his fighter and said, "Hit me, kick me, do whatever you want to do." Hembrick said he couldn't do that, and Adams

Hembrick laughed about that.

"I've always had confidence in coaches," he said. "Whatever they say is good for me; that's why you have them in your corner. I could have them in your corner. I could have thrown a tantrum — Boxer Goes Wild and Kills Coaches! but I didn't get angry at them at all. They didn't mean it. They don't have to take all the burden. I'm not gonna die."

Johnson said that boxers put competing in the Olympas "before everything — your mother, your father, your sister, your brother. This is all we talk about. I'll try to help him get the best pro contract possible. I keep kicking myself." Hembrick looked at the situation more philosophically.

"What can I learn from this?" he said. "Everything has a purpose. I'm definitely going to take some time off, a long time. I'm going to go to school somewhere in Detroit, but I'm going to stay in boxing. I believe I can make some money. But school is everything.

"People have been telling me I'm taking it pretty well," he said. "Well, I've got to go on with my life. I wanted to represent my country, real bad. I'm going to stay here and support my teammates now. They need my support. So, I'm going to stay right here. I'll be all right. I'll have a ball."

The U.S. coach, Taras Liske-

Louganis Turns Near Tragedy Into A Diving Triumph

By Christine Brennan

Washington Past Service SEOUL — With the composure, grace and courage that has made him the world's greatest diver, Greg Louganis turned a horrifying moment into a remarkable triumph Tuesday at the Summer Olympics.

After hitting the back of his head on the board during the preliminary three-meter springboard com-petition on Monday, Louganis came back with five stitches and dived almost perfectly to win the Olympic gold medal of his career, scoring 730.80 points.

Tan Liangde of China got the silver with 704.88 points and Li Deliang of China took the bronze with 665.28. Albin Killat of West Germany was fourth with 661.47 and Mark Bradshaw, the other American, finished fifth with 642.99. There were 12 men in the final competition after the field had been narrowed from the 35 in the Louganis was never seriously challenged. In his most trying moment, he proved his excellence. A bit unsatisfied with diving at age 28 and anxious to move onto a career of dancing and acting, he rose to the occasion and defended his 1984 gold medal with ease.

He had broken 700 points only a half-dozen or so times in his career.

He held nearly a nine-point lead over Tan with the six optional dives left in the 11-dive competition, and stretched it to more than 20 points two dives later with a stunning forward 31/2-somersault pike that carned him two 9.5s, four 9s and one 8.5. Tan, meanwhile, flipped his legs over on a reverse 21/2-somer sault and received 7.5s and 8s, losing 15 points to Louganis in one

2 From East Bloc Break Records in Swimming Heats

By Frank Litsky

New York Times Service SEOUL - Two Eastern European swimmers set Olympic records on Wednesday in qualifying heats, while Matt Biondi of the United States qualified for the 100-meter butterfly final.

Tamas Darnyi of Hungary was clocked in 4:16.55 seconds in the men's 400-meter individual med-ley, eclipsing the Olympic mark of 4:17.41 set by Alex Baumann of Canada in 1984. Damyi's world record in the individual medley is Silke Hoerner of East Germany smashed the Olympic mark in the women's 200-meter breaststroke with a time of 2:27.63. She beat the standard of 2:28.94 set in the previous heat by Ioulia Bogatcheva of the Soviet Union. Bogatcheva surpassed the 1980 Olympic record of 2:29.64 by Lina Kachushite of the

Biondi, meanwhile, performed the neat trick of swimming in one race and qualifying for two finals. Biondi, 22, is swimming in seven Olympic events and is expected to win medals in all of them.

On Sunday, in his first final here, he won the bronze medal in the men's 200-meter freestyle. Next on his schedule were the 100-meter butterfly and the 800-meter freefastest of eight qualifiers for Wednesday's butterfly final. Two hours after that preliminary hear, the United States was the secondfastest qualifier in the freestyle relay. Biondi was not acceled to swim in the relay heat, but he will swins in the final. Olympic swinning rules allow such substitutions. It was another shaky day for the U.S. team. Of the eight Americans in the day's four individual races, only Biondi, David Wharton and Mary Wayte qualified comfort-

Two others - Jay Mortenson and Mitzi Kremer - qualified for championship finals, but struggled. Mortenson's time of 54.44 seconds made the butterfly final by only eight-hundredths of a second

The 10,000 seats in the Olympic Park's 50-meter indoor pool were almost filled when Biondi swam his butterfly heat side by side with Michael Gross of West Germany, the 1984 Olympic champion.
Biondi won in 53.46 seconds and Gross was second in the heat and fourth over all in 53.78. The fastest qualifier was Andy Jameson of Britain, in 53.34.

In the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, no race was more exciting. than the 800-meter freestyle relay in which the United States parely caught West Germany for the gold medal. Here, both teams qualified easily.

The fastest qualifiers were East

The United States team consist- , ... ed of Craig Oppel 1:51,24, Dan Jorgensen 1:49,24, Matt Cetlinski 1:48.87 and Doug Gjertsen 1:49.41. In the final, Biondi and Troy Dalbey will replace Oppel and Jorgensen.

Biondi is approaching the but-terfly final as calmly as ever, which is remarkable considering the pressure the outside world seems to be putting on him. Many people had been saying he would win seven gold medals, as Mark Spitz did in .

the 1972 Munich Olympics.
They failed to realize that Spitz's main opposition came from other Americans. Now there are more good swimmers from more nations, and Biondi must contend with elite swimmers from Australia, West Germany, East Germany, Britain, Switzerland, Sweden, the Soviet Union and even Surinam. 200-meter freestyle final, the people who expected him to win seven golds called it an upset, or at least a disappointment. Actually, Biondi was widely expected to finish third. perhaps second, but a victory seemed unlikely in the 200, his weakest event.

Still, he remained on course for seven medals

Turk Lifter Claims 3 World Marks, and Gold Medal

SEOUL - Naim Suleymanogh of Turkey set three world weightlifting records Tuesday and won the gold medal in the 60-kilogram (132.5-pound) division.

Soviet athletes won five medals, including four gold, to run their leading total to 11, with six gold. China had seven medals, with one gold, and Bulgaria had six, with three gold. The United States was fourth with five medals, including two gold.

SEOUL — Having just completed his second reverse somersault, Greg Longanis was stretching out for a clean entry into the pool as he had done thousands of times before. But this time there was something terribly wrong. The back of his head smacked onto the board like a melon hitting the sidewalk.

The replay has been inescapable, it's everywhere. Over and over and over again in super slo-mo, so you can't help but wince at the impact. Each time you see it, it hurts a little more. By now everybody in the world must have seen it.

Except Louganis.
"Eventually" he'll see it. But not now, and not at the Olympics, Louganis said. "When we're away from here." He knows how many people have seen it, because they're talking about it throughout the athletes' village. "It's overwhelming. Every time I turn around, it's, 'How's your head?'

But he deliberately avoided watching the replay for fear of the psychological impact it might have. "I didn't want that image in my head going into this competition." Louganis said shortly after winning the gold medal in the springboard competition. "From my perspective, I jumped off the board and heard a big clank. That's all I know. I didn't want the visual image of seeing me hit my head."

Talk about playing hurt? About perfora turn — came back amid thunderous ap-places and pailed his next dive straight as a "In 1979, I didn't finish the contest, so I are there" he stick. Tuesday afternoon, with five perma-didn't have to get right back up there," he nent stitches in his head and a shaved patch on his crown the size of a six-iron divot, he won the gold medal breezing. Going into his because I didn't remember the pain. A lot of last dive, he was far enough ahead that all he times it's harder when you're conscious, be-of course, it was anything but. "I was scared going into the final," Lou-ganis said in his shy way. "When I hit my head on the board it shook my confidence a lot. I took extra dives in my morning workout. I needed to get over the jitters."

One of the dives on which he took extra practice was the villainous reverse 2½ somersault in the pike position. "I made sure to push way out," he said, grinning in embar-rassment. The first few, I was out in the middle of the pool."

This was not Louganis's first brush with the board. He was on the ladder and heard the thud at the 1983 World University Games when the Soviet diver Sergei Chalibashvili was killed when he crashed into the platform during a 31/2 reverse tuck; Louganis did the same dive that night in the preliminaries and the next night in the finals. In 1979, Louganis hit a platform, knocking on the platform. It was easy to block it out, because I didn't remember the pain. A lot of had to do to win was hit the water before he hit anything else. He made it look easy. But, more difficult because Tan Liangde," the silver medalist from China, who is Louganis's chief rival, "is a very difficult diver to beat. I couldn't afford to be down physically or psychologically. This was a very big vic-tory for me."

No one had to tell the crowd when Lougams's ninth dive came up. Perhaps because of what had happened the night before there was the sense that people were holding their breaths a little more than usual until each diver cleared the board. But they could be heard sucking in air when Louganis climbed

"I was nervous,' he said. "I'm not going to deny that. I felt everyone would be watching closely. I tried not to wait around and think about it. I told myself, 'Just go.' "

It wasn't one of his best, but it was more than good enough. "Whew!" he said to him-self as he entered the water, feeling ever so mance under pressure? On Monday night, himself unconscious for 20 minutes. Interest-after cutting his head on his ninth dive, ingly, he felt it was more difficult to come Louganis, with four temporary stitches holding his scalp together—and without missing cident than from the more serious one nine the greatest diver, all time, no question. country and himself with an elegant bashfulness and an unfalling pleasantness for more than a decade. He isn't in it for the money, he doesn't hold up the firp-flops after the dive and say, "Buy these." He's as close to an artist as sense permits and it's head to think artist as sport permits, and it's hard to think of a more admirable athlete.

> But on Tuesday he was scared. We know other athletes get scared, but how many have the courage to break the senseless lockerroom macho taboo and admit it?

"It's not the first time I've talked about my fears," he said, patiently explaining that "in 1984, in New Zealand I landed flat on a dive. Because of the lighting I got lost in the dive, and I didn't want to compete there anymore. I was afraid that if I did the dive again and landed flat, I'd lose the dive forever. I didn't compete because of fear. I talked to my coach, and he said I shouldn't try to weasel out of it and say I was sick — I should be honest about it. So I was. And when the story appeared, kids would come up to me and say, really appreciate you saying that. I'm afraid, too.

He sat as still as fine wine, the gold medal around his neck, and said, for the whole world to hear: "Fears aren't bad."

Matt Biondi of the United States, bottom, who is still on course for seven medals, won his 100-meter butterfly heat as Silke Hoerner of East Germany set an Olympic mark in the women's 200-meter breaststroke Hungary's Mihaly Kovacs was sandwiched between three Korean players as he tried to get rid of the ball during a handball contest.

Significant of the fact of violent, all but morderous apposition from her mother, she entered a competition amount by a Brooklyn magazine publisher and won a state of the mother of the most of the m

will ("It was easy for me t' cry — all I hadda do was think of home"); and in 1926 everything came together for her when Schulberg cast her as the heroine of Elinor

Glyn's novelette "It."

Einor Glyn confirmed that she had more "It" than any of the other "lovely young ladies" she had met in Hollywood — an endorsement that cost Paramount $50,000 — and after the movie's success she was irrevocably "the 'It' Girl."

Part of her appeal, as Stenn says, was that she was the first star in Hollywood who showed that it was possible to be highly sexed and unmistakably, healthily American at one and the same time. The "It" girl was also, in her own words, "jest a workin' goil." (Stenn reproduces all his quotations from her in the original Brooklynese.)

Off screen she chewed gum, peppered her conversa-tion with cheerful profamities and got on well with most of the people she worked with. She furnished her house with bold abandon, and amused herself by roller-skating up and down her driveway.

Then there were men. Gilbert Roland. The director Victor Fleming, half lover, half father-figure. Gary Cooper. The horribly boastful entertainer Harry Richman. There were many others, too, although Stenn convincingly rejects the more harid rumors that have become attached to her name.

It is often assumed that her career was destroyed by the coming of the talkies. The truth, Stenn shows, was more complicated. While her voice created problems, and the studio did nothing to help, she went on making films; they were not very good films, but she herself was generally well received. She died in 1965.

Mississippi of the North

By John F. Burns

Its roof caving in and walls askew, the cabin is all that remains trappers in the 1920s.

For a traveler riding a tug down-river to the Arctic Ocean, Little Chicago seemed redolent of the adventure marking the history of Canada's far north. But to Captain Henry Oakley and the 12-man crew of the Jock McNiven, a 780-ton vessel that pushes barges laden with the fuel and equipment needed to sustain life in the Far North, the sights along the river are little more than distance markers on the long voyage to the sea.

"When you've been up and down this river a few dozen times, it's all pretty familiar," said Oakley, 54. Since he started as a deckhand on river boats, he has had 33 years of experience, 17 of them as a captain on the Mackenzie River.

A 2,635-mile (4,300-kilometer) ribbon of cold, murky water that flows northward through the for-ests and tundra of the Canadian Arctic, the Mackenzie and two rivers that feed it, the Peace and the Finlay, form the longest continuous water flow in North America after the Mississippi River system.

Like the Mississippi in an earlier age, the Mackenzie plays a crucial role in a vast, largely unpopulated area — I.3 million square miles of resource-rich land and water, the Northwest Territories.

This summer, when drought lowered the Mississippi's water level and forced a reduction in barge traffic, the spring runoff from the Rocky Mountains kept the Mackenzie at normal levels.

But barge traffic on the Mackenzie, too, was down sharply from the when John Diefenbaker, then highs recorded earlier in the decade, largely because of freight cutbacks associated with the decline in oil and gas exploration in the Canadian Arctic resulting from low

In the meantime it has fallen night, with the 24-hour sun of the back on the bread-and-butter business that has sustained it for more than 50 years: carrying the food, in came into sight on the shore of fuel and equipment that lets the Canadian north survive.

Because many communities lie beyond the reach of roads and air of a community that took its name freight is too expensive for all but the most urgently needed goods, everything from baby food to the giant steel superstructures of oil rigs must come north by sea about 80 percent of it on the Mackenzie River barges.

"We keep the lamps burning across the entire Arctic," said Kirk Vander Ploeg, the company's terminal manager at Norman Wells, site of an oilfield and refinery operated by Imperial Oil Ltd., the Exxon Corp.'s Canadian subsidiary.

During halts at the town, the barges take on almost all of the Arctic's fuel — millions of gallons of aviation kerosene, specially treated diesel fuel that stays liquid down to 60 degrees below zero, the bunker oils that fuel power generators and gasoline for everything from snowmobiles to the longboats used for Eskimo whale hunts.

ALTHOUGH Northern Transportation has a virtual monopoly in all three of its major operating ar-eas — the 1,100-mile voyage down the Mackenzie from the company's northern terminus at Hay River, Northwest Territories; east and west along the Arctic coastline from Tuktoyaktuk, where the Mackenzie meets the Arctic Ocean, and up the west coast of Hudson's Bay from Churchill, Manitoba - the company has seen its total tonnage slip precipitously in the 1980s.

Gutted Lisbon Sifts for a Future

By Paul Delaney

New York Times Service ISBON — The fire began in a department store and quickly spread through the historic Chiado district, a neighborhood of steep, narrow streets. When it was over 10 hours later, much of the district was rubble and twisted steel. Stone and marble facades, tilting early, were guarded by fire fighters and the police for fear that they might topple on passers-by. The fire, which began on Aug. 25, was the city's worst disaster since an earthquake de-stroyed much of the downtown in 1755. The blaze destroyed the chic shopping district, Lisbon's equivalent of Fifth Avenue or Bond Street.

Famous old shops and businesses along Rua do Carmo and Rua Garrett, which survived the earthquake or were rebuilt afterward, were gone.

Two persons were killed, 18 commerciai buildings were burned out, and 40 businesses, most with little or no insurance, were destroyed. The fire left 300 people homeless and 2,000 more jobless, and it caused $350 million.

in damage.
It also left the country stunned, as though in mourning.

The fire has set off a debate over why it was so destructive. Fire fighters said they were hindered by new benches, huge flower urns and sidewalk cases in the area. And there is controversy over how to rebuild, whether to recreate the Chiado of old or design and build a more modern district. "The fire presents a very good opportunity to change the area, to make it exemplary, a model," said Concalo Byrne, an architect.

Emotions run deep over the fire. Weeks after the devastation, tears streamed down the face of a woman as she looked at the charred remains. She said she had worked in one of the shoos. A distraught shopkeeper said the govern-ment had given her a temporary site to do business, but she said she missed her old shop's "expensive mirrors and wood paneling "How can these be replaced?" she said. Among the things lost to the blaze were Casa Batalha, a 17th-century jewelry store that was one of the oldest shops in the city, and an extraordinary collection of early Portuguese music at the Valentim de Carvalho Byrne and others interviewed, including officials and private citizens, want Chiado rebuilt as quickly as possible, but they say they are concerned about the disagreements over how to do it. Officials say construction should begin within a year. Residents of the area are still debating more immediate points: The cause of the blaze, the reasons for its rapid spread, the timing of the first alarm and the quality of fire prevention and protection in Chiado and throughout the city.

The clean-up from the fire continues in the ruins of Lisbon's historic Chiado district.

An investigation into the cause is under way, and there have been suggestions that the national government rather than city officials should take responsibility for planning the

Meanwhile, sweeping changes are expected in fire fighting and fire prevention proce-dures, and the fire's repercussions could have an impact on local elections next year. Information from the inquiry is also likely to sway the decision on whether to rebuild in the old style or bow to modern impulses. The City Council has voted to preserve the facades - 18 out of 20 are still standing, if somewhat shakily — but there are serious questions whether this can be done. Most of those interviewed said future de-happens there will affect other sections of the city with narrow streets and potential fire But the main debate is over how a new Chiado should look. Ever since the architect velopment in Lisbon is tied to Chiado. What

Tomas Taveira designed the ultramodern Amoreiras shopping complex, residents of Lisbon have debated old versus new.

The spread of modern office and apartment buildings has troubled many. Some critics of the city's development have assailed what they call its Americanization, saying Lisbon is starting to look like Los Angeles.

Taveira has made it plain that he favored rebuilding the Chiado in a modern style. His is a powerful voice, but his approach has drawn powerful opponents who appear to have the upper hand, including President Mario Soares and Prime Minister Anibal Ca-

Mayor Nuno Krus Aoecasis, also an advocate of modernizing the city, originally sup-ported rebuilding in a more modern style, but now says he wants a new Chiado to resemble

Krus Abecasis said he had named a commission to investigate the cause and effects of the blaze and that he had ordered increased inspection of alarms and other warning sys-tems, sprinklers and building plans. Goncalo Ribeiro Teles, leader of the opposition and head of the Monarchist Party in the City Council, said "everybody assumed there was an alarm system" connected to the Police and Fire Departments.

"It was a big surprise that there wasn't a security system," he said. "The government
